POETRY.

THE LAND I LOVE.

What though the fields are bright and green,
And the air is calm and still,
And summer's golden flashes gleam,
On every verdant hill?
What though it seems an Eden here?
It never can remove
My heart from scenes to mem'ry dear,
In the distant land I love.

This balmy air—yon spotless sky,
Awhile the thoughts may claim;
And e'en in wild delight, the eye
May range the varied plain.
A moment seen, their beauties fade,
They only serve to prove,
How dear the scenes where childhood stray'd
In the blooming land I love.

Though sweetly beams the softened light,
Of beauty's speaking eye,
Yet softer hearts, and eyes as bright,
Glow 'neath a denser sky.
Oh! such as live within their beams,
Whose footsteps never rove,
Can little know the wanderer's dreams,
Of the native land they love!

Oh! bear me to the river's side,
Where it smoothly rolls along,
And let me hear at even tide,
The rustic's dulcet song.
And I will quit this sunny shore,
And fragrant orange groves,
And hie me o'er the ocean's roar,
To the sea-girt land I love.

THE VALUE OF FAME.

BY JOHN DAVIS WATSON.

Why should I toil to build an idle fame,
That in a few short fleeting years will fade,
And be forgotten in the misty Past?
No reputation stays the course of Time,
And Death, his brother, still must come at last.
Will grass be greener on a monarch's tomb,
Or flowers more fair than on a beggar's grave?
What empty baubles please Ambition's slaves
A Christmas toy is worth as much to man,
As Glory's wreath when life is fading fast.
Can the immortal spirits of the dead
Look down from Heavenly spheres upon the world
To smile, or make rejoicing at the praise,
Which men may heap upon their earthly names?
Or can a soul amidst the flames of Hell
Be solac'd by the thought that finite men
Are piling honors on their mortal part?
Deceitful Fame! upon thy gilded shrine
How many thousands yield their priceless souls,
A willing sacrifice to public praise!

WORDS OF CHEER.

BY MRS. S. F. THOMAS.

Be firm and be faithful,
Desert not the right,
The brave become bolder
The darker the night!
Then up and be doing,
Though cowards may fail,
Thy duty pursuing,
Dare all, and prevail!

If scorn be thy portion,
If hatred and loss,
If stripes and if prison,
Remember the cross!
God watches above thee,
And he will requite;
Desert those that love thee,
But never the right!

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

FOR LOVE, NOT GOLD.

"Well, sir, I've been waiting for your answer until my patience is quite exhausted."

"Uncle, I've not answered again, only because I regret to offend or disappoint you. I can only reiterate my determination."

"Confusion, sir! I want none of your sentimental nonsense! 'Marry only for love!'—'a wife whose only dower is her pure, true heart!' Very pretty, sir, to read about; very beautiful in theory. But I had hoped a little good sound sense from my nephew. I say, sir, because a girl is rich, has plenty of gold and land, is that any reason why she should not be loved?"

"By no means, uncle. But if I were to accede to your wishes, money, not love, is the first, greatest, and, in fact, the sole inducement, for your nephew to seek Miss Leighton—"

"Silence, sir! 'Tis not so. She is the daughter of my old friend; and we promised you to each other when you were little more than babies. Come now, Guy, be a sensible boy, and do as I bid you."

"Uncle, uncle, I cannot! I should lose all my self-respect without winning the respect of my future wife, were I to—"

"Then, sir, you are my nephew no longer, I'll cut you off with a shilling. I'll find some one else to leave my money to, or endow a lunatic asylum. But that would be providing a place for you, you ungrateful young rascal."

"Uncle, I am not ungrateful. And as to your money, leave it where you choose. But your affection I do value. Do not cast me from your heart, Uncle," Guy Eversfield said, approaching his uncle with extended hands.

"Words, words, mere words, sir! I want actions. Now, upon my honor as a gentleman, unless you will try to win Miss Leighton, you shall never cross my threshold again. Do you understand, sir?"

Guy looked intently for a moment into his uncle's face. It was not as he had often seen it, flushed and heated by a passion which, soon passing away, found him still the same kind, indulgent old uncle. There was no mistaking the cool determination.

And he answered, "I do, sir."

"Well, sir?"

"Good morning, sir. I am sorry to part thus."

Guy's handsome face was very pale as he turned away. He knew it would be useless to say more—even to put out his hand for a farewell clasp. "Thank Heaven, I have health and strength. I can go to work. And, thanks to my dear mother's thoughtful care, I have enough money to keep me, with economy, until I can make money myself. Dear mother! Little did she think, when putting aside from her own scantily-filled purse 'something for her boy to do with as he chose,' how much I would need it. I'll go immediately and accept Morris' offer. Go into his office, do his writing, and study with him. In a few years I can be admitted to the bar. I've no doubt of making a living. And—bless her sweet face!—she will not care for riches. My beautiful darling! There is no doubt about it. I am in love as sure as ever was a fellow, and with a girl whose name I do not even know—perhaps never shall. Well, this is the street where she got out. I will hunt for her again."

Five weeks before Guy met his fate. He had noticed first the little figure before him, clothed in deep mourning. Then the bright golden hair that fell from beneath the little hat, and rested on the sable wrapping.

He was thinking how very graceful she was, and wondering if her face was as beautiful as her hair and figure; and if he was to hurry forward a few steps ahead of her, would she think him very rude if he turned to catch one glimpse? He had made up his mind to risk it, when fortune favored him.

A little girl, barefooted, and looking generally miserable, came quickly by; handing the maiden, she cried, holding towards her a basket, "Do, lady, buy my flowers. Just one little bunch."

Never had Guy seen a lovelier face than the one that turned to look at the little flower-girl. Hastening forward, ostensibly to buy a bouquet, he stood beside the beautiful girl.

She had selected a little bunch of violets, and, putting her hand into her pocket, she hesitated. A startled look came into her eyes, as she said, "I have lost my purse, or—or some one has stolen it. I'm most sorry for your sake, poor child!"

In an instant Guy came to her relief.

"Permit me," he said, handing his well-filled purse.

"Thank you, sir," she returned, with a beautiful blush. "If you will buy some of her flowers it will answer as well."

Returning the bunch of violets to the basket, she was moving away, when Guy caught up the violets, and tossing a coin into the basket, he said, "these are the only flowers I care to keep."

"But, O, sir, you have given me much, too much."

"Not for these, little one," Guy answered, smiling, and passing on.

The child darted forward to overtake the beautiful girl, and tell her of her good fortune, and she turning again to the child's touch, Guy was made happy by another bow. He raised his hat. She could not mistake the respectful and admiring gaze. With a smile, a slight inclination of the graceful head, she passed on.

He would not follow, as much as he desired to know more of her; and he had never met her since, although certainly not less than twenty-five times had he walked up one side of the street and down the other.

* * * * * *

Seated just outside the library was Lewis Brewster, another nephew of Mr. Eversfield. He had heard every word of the conversation of his uncle with Guy, and rejoiced at the conclusion.

"Now is my chance, if I'm not mistaken," he said, "for either the rich wife or my uncle's fortune. Indeed, perhaps both. I hardly think, however, that the old gent will hold out against Guy. He has a strange hold on his heart. My father he never loved, while Guy's he did love more than all the world. What he has done for me was all on account of public opinion. He did not dare to cast his sister's son off entirely, so he gave me an education, and to understand that was all he should do for me. I must either now spend the best of my life in working for my daily bread, or find a rich wife. I much prefer the latter."

Looking through the blinds, he saw his uncle about leaving the room. Another moment, and the hall door closed after him.

"Now how am I to find my little jewel? The name I have. Now let me think."

Entering the library, he went up to his uncle's desk. His face brightened, and he exclaimed, "I am in luck. Here is my lady's, or rather her mamma's card—Mrs. Leighton."

The next day was Sunday. Thinking Miss Leighton would surely be going to church, Lewis Brewster, faultlessly dressed, began to traverse the street in which the heiress lived. Fortune, indeed, seemed continually smiling on him. When he had got almost opposite her dwelling the door opened, and a very handsomely-dressed young girl stepped out. Hastening across he ascended the steps, and, with the most graceful bow possible, inquired if Mr. Green lived there. He had not over-estimated his powers of attraction, for certainly the young girl smiled very sweetly when she answered, "No, sir." Nor did she seem anxious to dismiss him. The result was quite a little conversation; and when Lewis said 'Good-morning," he breathed a little sigh, and raised his handsome dark eyes pleadingly to hers, and went away.

"O, dear! I wonder what he meant by sighing and looking at me so? Certainly, if I was to see him many times, my heart wouldn't be my own very long. Many times? I declare, I'm not certain but it's only half with me now. I hope I shall see him again. I wonder who he is?"

While the young girl was thus thinking of Lewis, he was deeply engaged with thoughts of her.

"Well done for you, Brewster," he said. "You are all right now. Well, the girl is pretty. She'll do. There's a golden lustre about her that will more than compensate for actual beauty. She is not difficult material to work upon. If I mistake not, she will enjoy a little romantic affair—a runaway match. However, to-morrow I shall be able to decide better."

The day following, Lewis saw her at the window. A smile, a bow, given and returned. Another day, and they met to meet again and again many succeeding days.

"If I dared to ask you to call upon me, sir, how dearly I would love to. But—but—you know—" she was saying, when Lewis, interrupted her embarrassing apology, said:

"Yes, yes, I know, dear one, that your mamma is keeping you very close. She is anxious to give you to a man who cares nothing for you. And if you are forced to marry him, it will be a terrible sacrifice—a financial affair."

The girl's eyes were full of astonishment. She said, quickly, "O, you're mistaken, I am not—"

"Heaven grant that you will not yield to their persuasions. If you should—" His voice trembled. He could not speak for a moment—and then, with quivering lips and shaking voice, he said, "Then what will become of me?"

Well, it needed but little more to be said, and it was settled that he was to become her husband.

* * * * * *

Guy Eversfield had been less fortunate in finding his love. The weeks rolled into months, yet he saw her not. He had almost despaired, when, one evening, while seated in a crowded omnibus, a lady entered. Guy noticed that there was not a vacant seat.—Ever gallant, he rose from his seat and with winning grace offered his.

The lady raised her veil—and Guy could scarcely restrain an exclamation of joy as he beheld the lovely girl who had occupied his thoughts for many weeks. Although no sound escaped his lips, his eyes spoke plainly the glad surprise. With a faint blush, a smile and bow of thanks and recognition, she accepted the seat.

Guy was not going to lose sight of his love again, and was feeling desperate, when an old gent, jumping up, hurried out, Guy lost no time in seating himself beside the fair girl.

"I cannot feel that we are strangers."

She could not withstand his earnest, honest look, and answered, "Fate, it seems, has decided we shall not be."

Immediately Guy handed his card. An exclamation of surprise half escaped her lips and her color deepened. She continued to look at the card for a moment. Then, turning to Guy, she said:

"Your name is familiar to me, Mr. Eversfield. I have met your uncle at Miss Leighton's. My name is Mira Lester. I am staying with Mrs. Leighton."

On the way to that lady's Guy told of his fruitless attempts to see her again; and when they reached her destination he asked permission to call.

Miss Lester told him she had been absent ever since the morning after they first met. In answer to his request to call, she said;

"Mr. Eversfield, I am companion to Mrs. Leighton. She is an invalid, and my time is very much engaged with her. Even were it not so, ought not your call rather to be on Miss Leighton?"

"Ah! I see you have heard the story of Miss Leighton and myself being pledged to each other in our childhood! I have never seen her to remember; and, with all due respect to the young lady, I am not anxious to. Miss Leighton and myself can never be more than now. A few days after meeting you, I gave my uncle to understand this.—Well, he sent me forth: I've not seen him since."

Mira understood that she had influenced his decision, and she said, "You were hasty, Mr. Eversfield; you should have seen Miss Leighton. You might have grown to—"

Guy interrupted her, saying, "Never!—Then it could not be. The very idea of Miss Leighton was hateful to me. Without a sigh I accepted my Uncle's decision, and shall with joy resign a fortune, if, by so doing, win a heart of my own seeking."

They had reached Mrs. Leighton's door, and when Guy had touched the bell, he said, "I will not ask to enter to-night. It is late and you are tired. But to-morrow.—May I?"

"Au revoir," she answered, with a beautiful smile.

Guy knew that his plea was granted.

When, the next evening, Guy entered Mrs. Leighton's, he was not surprised that he passed the spacious and elegant drawing-room, and was ushered instead into a cosey little sitting-room. He felt far happier with little Mira Lester there than he could possibly have done with the mistress of the mansion, surrounded by all the magnificence in her apartments.

Mira soon knew that she had won the true and devoted love of a noble man, that for love of her he would gladly put aside all the luxury and ease that he had been accustomed to, and accept a life of toil and privation. Yet there were many misgivings in her heart as she listened to his words of love.

"Ah, you know so little of me—of my family. I believe you love me; but when the stern realities of life are before you, may you not regret?" she said.

"Never—never!" Guy answered, fervently, clasping the little hand closer in his.

"Will you always love me as now?" she whispered, low.

"Never less, dear one, and more and more as the years grow many with us."

"Guy," she said, her beautiful eyes filled with tears, "I have a widowed mother; she needs my support."

"And mine, my own," he answered.

"Guy"—her hand was on his shoulder, her heart eagerly searching his—"Guy, you may be disappointed—you will. My mother is employed here, in this house; you—"

"O, my love, why will you fill your heart with doubts? Your mother is my mother, and where'er I find her, in 'palace hall or lowly cot,' here is the post of honor, for she is the mother of my queen."

"Then come to her."

Mira led Guy through the hall, and opening the door, ushered him into a very handsomely-furnished room. A gentle, delicate looking woman reclined in an invalid's chair.

Guy's eyes were full of astonishment. But he drew near, and, taking the extended hand, raised it to his lips, and said, "Mother—Mira has given me permission to call you so—will you give us your blessing on our love?"

"Right willingly, my dear son," she said; "and there is somebody over there who will join blessings with me, I'm sure."

Guy had not noticed the gentleman seated on the other side of the apartment. He turned, and Guy exclaimed, "Uncle!" turning his inquiring gaze from one to another.

"Yes, 'uncle,' you young rascal—no, you dear boy! Yes, God bless you—both of you?" Mr. Eversfield said, clasping Guy and Mira in one embrace.

"I—I cannot understand," Guy began saying.

And Mira, turning her pleading eyes to his, said, "O! forgive me, Guy—"

"Forgive! Nothing of the kind. Bless, rather. 'Pon my soul, if I am not half crying, when this is the happiest day of my life. Ah! my boy, Fate wove her web about you. This dear girl is Miss Leighton—"

"Then who, in Heaven's name, is this girl?" cried out Lewis Brewster, who had entered the room just then, holding by the hand a pale and trembling girl.

"Forgive me! O, forgive me, Lewis!" the girl sobbed.

And Mr. Eversfield exclaimed, "What is all this about? What does it mean?"

"It means, sir, that this girl married me under false pretences. I believed her Miss Leighton," Lewis answered, angrily.

"Ah, ha! Indeed! And now you find out you have married the maid instead of the mistress. Served you right! But she is too good for you."

"I—I—it is not legal, sir. I will not stand to it. I was deceived," Lewis continued.

"O, I tried to tell you once, but you would not let me. You would call me Miss Leighton. I feared to lose you. I loved you. Indeed I did!"

"Poor girl! You are to be pitied. And you, sir—did you not deceive her with pretences of true love? Bah! She is your wife! And look to it, sir! I will not have my niece treated with any disrespect, even by her husband. There, child, dry your tears. I will take you with me until your husband finds a home for you. You, sir, had better try and win the same position occupied an hour ago in your wife's heart. Go, now!"

Crestfallen, Lewis left the room and house. But he returned to his senses in a few days, and preparing a home for his bride, took her to it, declaring, at any rate, she was the handsomest girl he knew, and looked the lady.

When the door closed after Lewis Brewster and his wife, Mira turned quickly, and said, "Guy, I meant not to continue this deception. When I first found out your name—I hardly know why—I only gave you a part of mine; unless I liked you well enough, even then, to be anxious to have Miss Leighton become less hateful to you. I would have told you when you first called, but your uncle made me promise not to. Am I forgiven?"

"Don't speak of forgiveness, dear love," Guy said. "I have won a pure and true heart, and that, to me, was more than all the gold that earth can give."

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

BY BROWNE.

He was a middle-aged man, and would pass anywhere for an ex-Congressman. The cold sweat of wisdom and common-sense sparkled on his massive brow, and no one to look at him would suppose that he would be guilty of a mean action.

He boarded the Morris and Essex 7:50 train due West, and seating himself near the stove, he commenced to devour the contents of a patent medicine almanac with avidity.

When the train had gone through the Erie tunnel, the conductor stepped into the car, and shouted:

"Tickets!"

The passengers immediately produced either the necessary pasteboard, or the collateral that speaks all languages; and the conductor finally reached the middle-aged pilgrim, and screamed in his ear:

"Tickets, please!"

"Yes, sir," said the traveler, "I will; I am always happy to tick it when and wherever I can, and I'm much obliged to you for telling me to."

"I want your ticket, sir," said the conductor sternly, when the traveler went on:

"It is a well-authenticated fact that Powhatan *was going to club the head off of Cap*tain Smith, but he didn't, and I wish you would tell your children of it. Yes, sir, you should pour the history of our beloved country into your children if it takes half of the money that you 'knock down' on this road to do it."

"I am not a thief, sir," cried the conductor, "and if you don't hand out your ticket right away, I'll expel you from this train."

"And don't forget," the pilgrim went on, "to tell your children about old Hickory Jackson, and the way in which he cleaned out them Britishers at New Orleans. O, wasn't it beautiful! Whenever I think of it, I feel like hustling off my duster, and turning flip-flaps all over creation."

"Hand out that ticket, or bounce!" yelled the collector of fares.

"And don't fail," continued the peregrinator, "to mention to your youngsters something about old Harrison the Injun fighter:

Old Tippecanoe,
And Tyler, too,

eh? and be sure to tell them that little story about George Washington and the juvenile axe."

"If you don't favor me with your ticket," said the conductor, "I'll stop the train and put you off."

The old fellow paid no attention to the remarks addressed to him, but continued:

"O, for the good old days of Jefferson and Jackson; them was the days of square deals, and no murderer could get a stay of proceedings, and no Tweed could rob the people and get away with the swag. There's too many foreign office-holders now, anyhow, that's what's the matter."

"Give me your ticket!" screamed the conductor.

"Supposin' I ain't got none?" replied the man.

"Then give me your money."

"Ain't got none; will my note of hand do?"

"No, sir; you may take your choice; ticket, money or bounce."

"Then bounce is the programme."

The conductor, in an ecstasy of rage, stopped the car, and as the old fellow stepped out into the meadows, he drew a gun out of the leg of his pantaloons. The conductor turned pale at the idea of being shot, when the traveler sweetly, and said:

"I ain't agoing to harm a hair of your head, mister; I came out here to go snipe shooting, and if you hadn't let me off, I'd had to have jumped off, and run the risk of breaking my gun. Remember what I told you about American history, and pour it into your children if it makes you go broke."

The conductor crawled into the car with a sickening smile, the passengers chuckled, and as the train started off, the old man was looking for a wisp of snipe.

WANTED A FARM.

A real estate agent was waited on yesterday by a tall man with a weed on his hat, who said he had the cash to pay for a farm, provided he could get one to suit. The agent smiled him to a seat, and brought out his register of descriptions. He had several farms registered on his books, and he had no doubt that he could suit the would-be purchaser. The stranger remarked:

"What I want is a farm of about three hundred acres."

"I've got it," replied the dealer.

"I'd like about six big hills on it."

"Here she is—here's a farm with exactly six hills on it."

"And I'd like a lake near the centre."

"Here you are. Here's a farm with a lake exactly in the centre."

"And I want a big natural cavern in one of the hills."

"Here you are." There's a cave on this farm which can't be beat."

The stranger drew a long breath, and went on:

"I want a farm of three hundred acres, but one hundred acres must be marsh land."

"Here she is," was the ready reply. "Just three hundred acres on the farm, and just one hundred in marsh land."

"I must have a waterfall twenty-six feet high on the farm," continued the stranger.

"Here you are. This farm has a natural waterfall of twenty-five feet and eleven inches. I don't suppose an inch, more or less, on a waterfall amounts to much?"

"Well, no, but I want a windmill on one of the hills."

"That was put up last year," was the calm reply.

It was sometime before the stranger thought of anything else, but he finally said:

"There must be a Baptist church right across the road from the house."

"One built there last summer, sir."

"It must be a brick church."

"So it is."

"Has it an organ?"

"It has."

"Then I can't buy the farm of you," said the stranger, rising to go. "If there's any thing I hate, it is a church organ, and you can see for yourself that I would be in a state of continual misery. The farm suits me first rate, but I cant go that organ."

Just what estimate those two men placed upon each other's veracity as they separated will never be known.

WHAT A WEAK WOMAN CAN DO.

She can sit at the open window of a railway carriage with a stiff northeast wind blowing in, that chills everybody in the vicinity to the marrow, for two hours, in a thin muslin dress, without flinching.

She can dance or waltz down the captain of a marching regiment, and at the eleven o'clock supper put away lobster salad, ice cream, champagne, cake and coffee, without flinching, sufficient for a week's nightmare to a strong man.

She can comb her hair all back so as to leave the roots of it to the full play of a December breeze, and wear a bonnet on top of a chignon, leaving ears and head exposed with impunity, when the thermometer is ten degrees below zero.

She can pull over a thousand dollars' worth of dry goods for the investment of fifty cents.

She can study music for ten years sufficiently to enable her to perform excellently, *when not in the presence of those who de*sire to hear her.

She can balance herself on the ball of her great toe and a shoe-heel the size of a dime all day in the public streets without falling.

She can occupy three seats in a horse-car, and be utterly oblivious that any of her own sex are standing up.

She shows unusual strength and firmness in the holding of real estate, solitaire diamonds, and other valuable property which her husband places in her hands previous to his compromising with his creditors for twenty cents on a dollar.

JOB WORK
In all its Branches.

AN ARKANSAS COW.

The yield of milk from Northern dairy cows is incredible to people in regions where cattle are raised mostly for beef and hides.

Judge Grant was in Little Rock, Ark., in attendance at the United States Court. One morning he saw a farmer with a slouch hat, and a genuine butternut suit, trying to sell a cow in the market there. It was a large, long-horned animal, and the planter was informing a man that the cow would give four quarts of milk a day, if fed well.

Up stepped the judge. "What do you ask for the cow?"

"About thirty dollars. She'll give five quarts of milk if you feed her well," replied the planter, and he proceeded to describe her good qualities.

Said the judge, "I have cows on my farm not much more than half as big as your cow, which give twenty to twenty-five quarts of milk a day."

The planter eyed the judge sharply for a moment, as if trying to remember whether he had ever seen him before or not, and then asked, "Stranger, where do you live?"

"My home is in Iowa."

"Yes, stranger, I don't dispute it. There was heaps of sogers from Iowa down here during the war, and, stranger, they was the all-firedest liars in the whole Yankee army. Mabbe you mought be an officer in some of them rigiments?"

The judge slid for the court-house.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS.

A long chap, with a piping voice, entered a saloon, and gaining the attention of the half-dozen loafers therein congregated, said:

"Gentlemen, how many of you will drink at my expense?"

"I will!" was repeated by the seven, in chorus.

"This proves to you, gentlemen," continued the vagrant, putting down a nickel for his own beer, "how little can be depended on first impressions. You love me now, filled with the anticipations of a good square drink. Your anticipations will be blasted, and then you will hate me. Let this be a great moral lesson to you."

They put him out in a hurry, but the great moral lesson was there just the same.

DEATH OF GEN. CUSTER.

News reaches us of the slaughter of over three hundred United States soldiers on the Little Horn river in Montana Territory. Our forces were divided into two divisions; the first commanded by Gen. Custer, the second by Major Reno. They made a simultaneous attack upon the Indian encampment, which was some five miles in length.—Custer advanced on the upper portion of their strong-hold leaving Reno to fall upon the lower. The Indians numbering between three and four thousand active men, having been previously provided with the necessary arms and ammunition by Grant's "Indian policy" agents, (the majority of whom are his relatives) overcame our forces, and now a justly indignant country mourns the loss of one of her most distinguished and accomplished soldiers and three hundred others equally brave—for there they all lie together, and what speaks more for them! A similar fate would have overtaken the gallant little Reno (whose father was killed leading his division at Gettysburg) had not Gibbon arrived. Let us be thankful it was not worse; and let us not forget that for this deplorable butchery the Republican administration is responsible. It was to be hoped that after the massacre of Gen. Canby and so many noble young soldiers in the Lava Beds, Grant would change his "Indian Policy," which alone has been enough to ruin any administration.

INDIANA TO TILDEN.

Senator McDonald of Indiana arrived in Washington July 2d, from St. Louis, and found awaiting him the following telegram from Speaker Kerr, dated Rockbridge, Alum Springs, Virginia, June 30, 1876, and which would have been made public before had the Senator been in Washington:

I sincerely rejoice in bold and faithful declarations of principles and duty made by the National Democratic party at St. Louis, and I regard it now as the highest public duty of every Democrat and every true friend of reform and an honest administration throughout the country, to give to the every way excellent and desirable ticket nominated there a hearty and vigorous support. Victory will surely reward proper and honorable efforts in their behalf, and bring safety, reform and prosperity to the country.

M. C. KERR.

The first Republican preparations for the Presidential campaign document promises to come from the Mississippi Outrage Committee, which has just returned. The Republican members are already relating stories of the horrible condition of affairs there, which is to be made the pretense undoubtedly of sending troops into the State this fall to wrest it from the hands of the Democrats in the Presidential election.—The President is represented as being very desirous of sending the military into Louisiana and Mississippi this fall, and only waits for the slightest occasion, either through a report of the Senate Committee or a bogus outrage, to issue the necessary order.

Bellefonte, Pennsylvania was visited by a terrific thunder storm July 1st.—The rain fell in torrents, flooding cellars and carrying off dwellings in other districts. During the storm the town was the scene of great excitement, the water sweeping over the hillsides and destroying everything in its course. Harper Brothers, merchants, lost over $2,000 worth of goods. B. Tyson was carried away in his slaughter-house and is supposed to have been drowned.—The Phoenix, flour mills, Lion & McLoy's iron works and Curtin's iron works also suffered badly, and a dam was washed away.

A destructive tornado visited Fort Madison, Ia., on the evening of July 3, lasting about fifteen minutes. The St. Joseph Catholic Church was completely demolished by the falling of the steeple, which was 226 feet high. All of the other churches are more or less damaged. The Park house is a total wreck. Almost every dwelling in the city sustained serious damage, and about forty houses are wholly unroofed. Nearly all of the shade trees are broken off or uprooted. The damage is estimated at $200,000. There was no loss of life.

The returns thus far received from Denver, Col., indicate that the proposed State Constitution has been ratified by an overwhelming majority. Denver city polled its full vote, and gives 5,000 majority for ratification. The day (July 1) was treated by all classes as a holiday, stores and other places of business being closed, and exclusive attention given to the election. Colorado will vote for President this year.

Colfax will hardly take the stump for Hayes, for one reason among others, that voters sometimes take occasion to ask unpleasant questions at campaign gatherings.

Kilpatrick while stumping for the Radical ticket will have a splendid chance to tell what he professes to know about Butterfield's $20,000.

Matilda Fletcher, of Iowa, who did a good deal of effective stump speaking for Grant in 1872, has declared for Tilden.

"Hurrah for Hayes and Hard Times" is suggested as a musical campaign cry for the Republicans.

MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Pursuant to adjournment the Washington Monument Association met at the Rock House, Tuesday afternoon, July 4th.

On motion of Mr. Good it was

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be and are hereby tendered to Rev. J. H. Vincent, for his able and eloquent oration this day delivered at the Centennial Celebration on Washington Rock.

On motion of Mr. Horton,

Similar thanks were voted to Rev. T. S. Brown, Mr. E. S. Baily and Mr. James P. Dawes, for the valuable services rendered by them respectively.

On motion of Mr. Gillies

A like acknowledgment was accorded Messrs. Harper and Good.

On motion of Mr. Adams

The Plainfield papers were requested to publish the Oration of Doctor Vincent and the Historical sketch by Mr. Baily.

On motion of Mr. Scribner

Samuel Smalley was elected a member of the Association.

On motion of Mr. Gillies

The Association adjourned to meet in Plainfield, Thursday evening, July 20th.

T. J. GILLIES, Rec. Sec.

We desire to be excused for the lateness of our paper this week, and for any errors that may occur in it. The task of enlarging THE CONSTITUTIONALIST has not been an easy one, and the fact that 4th of July has taken a day from us this week, must be one excuse for lateness. After this week we shall endeavor to be out on time.

The Republicans of Plainfield have caused a handsome Hayes and Wheeler banner to be stretched across Front St. in front of the Post Office, with the portraits of the candidates portrayed thereon. Now let the Democrats fling to the breeze a banner emblazoned with the names of the next President and Vice President, TILDEN and HENDRICKS.

The notorious O. M. House, who for so many years has figured as a divorce lawyer in New York city, was shot and instantly killed by his wife Irene, near Trenton, on Saturday last. She has been released from jail on bail.

We urge upon the Democracy of Plainfield to speedily form a Tilden and Hendricks club and get ready for the approaching campaign. The opposition are up and doing. The Democrats should not be behind hand.

The Corner Stone of Grace Church will (D. V.) be laid by Bishop Scarborough at the Corner of Sixth and Sycamore Sts., on Wednesday next at 4 o'clock, P. M. The public are respectfully invited to be present.

There will be a Grand Ratification of the action of the Democratic Party in St. Louis held in Plainfield at an early date, notice thereof will be given in a subsequent issue or otherwise.

ARRANGEMENTS are being perfected for a Grand Concert to take place in this city in a few weeks, at which some of the most eminent New York talent will appear.

The Central Times speaks of a lobster displayed in Frazee's wagon during the 4th of July procession. Pretty big lobster that to weigh 250 pounds.—Sure it wasn't an elephant!

Co. E's Picnic at Vail's Grove, last Thursday, was, as usual, a grand success. The Company will go into camp at Trenton on Tuesday next.

That staunch Democratic journal, the Trenton True American, comes to us decked out in a new dress, looking neat and clean.

A Worcester paper wants Grant to stump the country for Hayes and Wheeler—which is weak for a joke, and wicked if meant in sober earnest.

An obituary notice of the death of Joshua Brown, of Westfield came too late for this issue.

WE will pay for all THE CONSTITUTIONALISTS of the issue of June 30th that we can get.

COMMUNICATED.

PLAINFIELD, July 6, 1876.

EDITORS CONSTITUTIONALIST:

Gentlemen—I am frequently asked by parties coming to our city to live, why New York daily papers cannot be obtained here at New York prices.

I will give the following information to show the reasons that they are not sold for 2 and 4 cents each:

The New York Herald, Times, World and Tribune, cost the news dealers who can buy at their counter, 3 cents each for 1 copy or 100 copies. The country dealers buy through the different news companies, and their prices are 3¼ cts. each. This is the price when packed and ready for shipping. On the Central R. R. since June 1st, 1872, the rate for carrying newspapers has been 3 cts. a pound, this will make the large daily's cost the dealer for one week (6 papers) 22 cents. To deliver these papers to regular subscribers throughout our city boys are employed, and the average cost to do this is about 3 cents a week to each subscriber, making the 6 dailys cost to the dealer 25 cents a week.

To form some idea what the express amounts to upon the morning papers sold in our city, the papers will weigh over 110 pounds a day, making $3.30 a day or about $1,025 a year. When I am alone in the business I can supply the city with 9 boys and those selling at the depot and streets get one-half a cent each. Now there are about 16 or 18 employed, and those selling get one cent each. So it costs about $12.00 a week more now to supply the trade than when alone. So you will readily see that the news business is not all profit.

I remain yours truly,
W. H. WILLIAMS.

MR. EDITOR—In relation to the procession of July 4th, I see the following in this week's Times: "The number taking part in it however, was not as large as was hoped. * * * The trades also, failed to turn out in the force that was anticipated." Allow me to say, Mr. Editor, that the procession was fully as large as anticipated, indeed even larger, as it has been spoken of the largest civil procession ever witnessed in Plainfield, and in regard to trade representation, I ask you if it could be grander? One of the committee informs me that there was double the number of representations than they expected. I do like to see any enterprise in our city "puffed up," and not "blowed down."

VERITAS.

The following article was written by M. Lafayette Angleman, one of the graduates of the Public School and read by him at the recent Commencement, for which he received the highest prize for best English Composition.

A SKETCH OF PLAINFIELD AND ITS PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

When America was discovered by Cabot in 1497, the Delaware Indians occupied what is now New Jersey. But the particular tribe that inhabited this portion of the State is not definitely known, though the collections of the New Jersey Historical Society state that the Sanhicans inhabited that portion of the Province lying west of Staten Island. These Indians are described by the early historians as a very peaceful race, and there exist traditions that seems to corroborate this statement. One of these is that the smooth, round, basin-like holes in the rocks at Wetumka Falls, just back of Plainfield, were formed by the Indians grinding corn.

In 1664, John Bailey and others obtained, under permission of Gov. Nicholls, a deed from the Indians for the land north of the Raritan to a few miles beyond Elizabeth river, and westward twice as far. This included what is now comprised in Plainfield, Somerville, Woodbridge, Perth Amboy and Elizabeth. For this tract the Indians received articles to the value of £38, 14s.

In 1684, Thomas Gordon, John Forbes, John Barclay, brother of the Governor of the Province, and Thomas and Robert Fullerton, settled about two and a half miles southwest of the present site of New Brooklyn. A map showing the settled portions in 1685, places the homes of these settlers along the banks of Cedar Brook, beginning at its source, which is near John Taylor Johnston's residence, and ending at the connection of Cedar Brook with another small stream at New Brooklyn. In a letter written by Robert Fullerton to his brother in Scotland, soon after his arrival, he says: "We have the honour to be the first inland planters in this part of America." The history of Plainfield, thus individualized, begins with settlement of these Scots upon Cedar Brook in 1684.

Previous to 1735 Plainfield was a wilderness, with here and there a log cabin, built with one end pointing toward the rising and the other toward the setting sun. Among the live oaks and Indian wigwams, was built in 1735, the first frame house, which was the nucleus about which all others centered. The inhabitants at the time of the erection of this building numbered ten. It was not until 1756 that the next frame house was erected, and the number of persons in the place then was only fourteen. Ten years brought three houses more, and increased the population to 36. It was in this decade that the first grist mill was built. It was placed by its builder, John Webster, on the banks of the upper mill pond, but in 1790, was removed to where it now stands, on Somerset Street, and the place named Milltown.

At the opening of the Revolution the population of Plainfield, according to statistics given in the Plainfield Herald, published about 1835, was 55. As far as battles were concerned our village played a very insignificant part in this war; but skirmishes were not so rare, and there was scarcely a fence but bore testimony to their frequent occurrence. After the retreat of Howe from New Brunswick, in the summer of 1777, Washington fell back to Green Brook, and, wishing to watch the movements of the British, requested to be conducted to the highest part of the Mountain.—Mr. Edward F. Randolph offered his services and led Washington to a large rock on the brow of the hill from which the General watched the movements of Howe's forces. The name Washington Rock was given in honor of this visit. It is said that often after Washington resorted to this spot to watch the movements of the enemy; and that, once at least, Gen. Lafayette accompanied him. In connection with Washington's visit to the Rock a tradition exists that the house formerly owned by Daniel Drake and now occupied by Mr. John Harberger, was used for a time as Washington's headquarters. The administration under John Adams, placed a U. S. encampment along Green Brook between this place and Evona, in the fall of 1799; but the inhabitants opposed it, and the following summer witnessed their departure.

Until 1794 Plainfield had been a part of the borough of Elizabeth, but in that year it became a part of Westfield township. By 1800 the village had increased in population to 215, and boasted a stage line. This line connected New York and Philadelphia, and a stage passed each way three times a week. It was called the "Swift-sure," but from some cause, probably a good one, it was as widely known as the "Slow-dangerous." Besides the main road, the Old Stage Road, as it was called, there was the road to Samptown, now William Street, the Rahway road, now Peace St., and the Mountain road, a narrow lane leading back to the mountains, called now Somerset St.

Until about 1830 these four streets constituted the extent of public thoroughfares in the village of Plainfield. But between the years '34—'37 several streets parallel to Main Street, extending as far back as Fifth Street, were laid out, as were also cross streets, lying between William and Peace. The first, or among the first, stores of the place was one kept by Thomas Nistet. After Nistet left John Randolph kept a miscellaneous, perhaps better characterized as a country store, on the corner of the Old Stage Road and Mountain road, now Front and Somerset Streets. The first hat factory, built in 1800 by John Wilson, was situated along the brook back of the present site of Scheppin's clothing manufactory, corner of Grove and Front Streets. Between 1820-'45, there were as many as ten or fifteen hat factories in the place, supplying about $30,000 worth of hats annually for the Southern market.

Prior to the establishment of the Post Office in 1808, the inhabitants of Plainfield went to Quibbletown (now New Market) or Scotch Plains for their letters. But this was no great inconvenience one would think, judging from the postmaster's receipts for the first three months. Mr. Samuel Manning was the first postmaster, and his receipts for the first quarter were one dollar, of which he received half for his services. In 1788 the first meeting house was built by the Friends; the building is still standing on Peace Street. The other denominations attended Church either at Samptown or Scotch Plains. But a division in the church at Samptown resulted in the Plainfield portion of the congregation holding prayer meetings in their own village on Sunday afternoons; and finally in the erection of the First Baptist Church in 1818, under the charge of the Rev. Jacob Randolph. The First Presbyterians erected their place of worship in 1826, and their first pastor was the Rev. Lewis Bond. In 1832 the Methodists built a house of worship; in 1837 the Seventh Day Baptists built theirs; and in 1843 the 2d Baptist Church was erected. In a work on New Jersey published about this time, the Second Baptist edifice is described as an "elegant building." The Rev. Daniel T. Hill was the first pastor.

Plainfield was merely a small country village until about 1830, when a new impetus appeared to be given to the place; new streets were laid out, a Ladies' Library was opened about 1829, followed soon after by an Apprentices' Library; a fire insurance company was chartered in 1832; and in 1835 a paper was published by the name of Plainfield Herald. The publishers, Freeman, and afterward Isaac Cole, announced it to be the largest in the State. Three sides of it were published in N. Y. The Elizabethtown and Somerville Railroad, which had been chartered in 1831, was opened in 1836. For a time they ran horse-cars only, but in 1838 steam engines were used.

Plainfield, which to this time had belonged to the township of Westfield, and was a suburb of the village of Scotch Plains, began now to assert its independence, and was, in 1847, made a township. Owing to the rapid increase in population and the demand for certain advantages consequent upon incorporation, it was made a city in 1869. From the separation of Plainfield township from that of Westfield, the history of the place and that of its Public School are closely connected.

The first school in Plainfield was held in 1780. The house formerly occupied by Robert Anderson, on the corner of Front and Peace Streets, was used about 1800 as a school-house; and a little later a school-house occupied the corner where Pope Bros. are now established. The next item of interest was the erection of an academy on the south side of Main street, near the present site of New, in 1813. A few years after it caught fire, and the upper part was burned. The lower half now stands on Front street nearly opposite its original position. The impetus given by the growth of 1830-1, affected the educational matters of the village, resulting in the erection of two rival seminaries. These were the Plainfield Seminary, now standing on the south side of the 1st Presbyterian Church, and the Plainfield Classical Institute, which stood opposite the First Baptist Church, and which, minus its hallway, stands there now in the shape of two dwelling houses. They both failed for want of pupils and funds. Thus were the educational interests of the place represented prior to the formation of Plainfield township, from which time dates the history of our Public School.

Immediately upon its formation, Plainfield township, under a law just passed, elected Dr. C. H. Stillman Township Superintendent of Schools, and voted $100 for school purposes, and $300 for the education of poor children. The township of Plainfield contained school districts Nos. 8 and 9 of Westfield, and two parts forming joint districts with adjoining townships. These two districts, averaging 215 children each, were too large for the ordinary district school, and the advantages that would accrue from their union were so many that they were joined, forming one district. The first official act of the Township Superintendent was the issuing immediately after the union of the districts, a District Notice, dated May 29, 1847, calling a meeting for the election of trustees. To this notice was appended a note to the effect that since "it is the object of this arrangement to secure uniformity and harmony in the management of the Public Schools of Plainfield it is desirable that one person should be selected by trustees from each religious society of the place." For the five months that [illegible] the first school year, one school was held in the upper part of what was originally intended for a [illegible] now occupied by Mr. [illegible] as a grocery store; and another, in a barber's shop, along the [illegible] In 1848 the Trustees proceeded to erect upon an acre of land on what is now Fourth Street, a building 30x40 ft., to cost about $3,000. To this building was added in 1858, at a cost of $1,800, a wing corresponding to the two stories of the main building. In 1869 the brick building on 5th Street was erected, costing, with furniture, &c., $20,000; and in 1874 another building intended for the primary department, was built on the lower end of 5th Street, corner of Liberty, at a total cost of $22,000. In his report in 1848, Dr. Stillman, the Superintendent of Schools, states that efforts were being made to obtain chemical and philosophical apparatus, and library for the school, and with some prospect of success. But the children would not read the old musty books that were given for the library, and in 1850 the school held a fair on the 4th of July, thereby raising about $180, which was used in purchasing suitable books. The chemical and philosophical apparatus was procured through the efforts of Dr. Stillman and friends, who subscribed $30 each. The grading of the school was spoken of, and, according to the then prevalent ideas in regard to the matter, was attended with some success at the establishment of the school in '47; but the first regular course of study was established under the principalship of Mr. E. C. Beach, in 1866. The first class graduated in 1870.

The first law relative to the establishment of Public Schools was passed April 17, 1846. But under this act only twice as much money could be raised as was appropriated by the State. As this State appropriation was very meagre affair, the amount raised only lessened somewhat the price of tuition. In 1866 the school at Plainfield applied to the Legislature for permission to raise by taxation $2,800. Much opposition was experienced from the farmers in the Assembly, and it became necessary for the villagers to petition the Legislature. The act was finally passed, Plainfield thus obtaining the honor of the first free school in the State. In all, eight special acts have been passed by the Legislature with reference to the Public School of Plainfield. All but two of these were written by the present President of the Board of Education, Dr. C. H. Stillman, and by his influence passed; and it is to him largely that Plainfield owes her thanks for the position her schools hold today. Met by conservatism and opposition at every step, he has still kept a high standard in view, and our Plainfield school stands second to none in the State.

The Superintendent gives in his report for 1847, the first school year as number of pupils 266; number of teachers employed four, and amount of money received for school purposes $253 40, and amount expended $266 22. Contrast this with the present roll of 1344; 22 teachers are now employed; and for 1875, $19,053 was spent for school purposes.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

WE understand that the Scotch Plains boys were perfectly prepared to have given a very warm reception to any party or parties, foolish enough to undertake a recapture from them of their relic of 1776. They say that with this their forefathers did good service for their country in that year, that with it they have celebrated the first centennial of the stirring events in which it played so active a part, and if they do not in like manner celebrate the second centennial with it, that it will be no fault of theirs.

ON Sunday morning, July 2d, the Rev. Dr. House a Missionary from Siam preached in the Scotch Plains Baptist Church. In the afternoon of that day, Mrs. Dr. House interested the Sunday School by relating the customs and habits, manner of living, idol worship, &c., of the Siamese. In the evening, the Rev. Mr. Buchanan preached an interesting discourse from the words: "Thou hast increased the nation. Thou art glorified." The service of the evening was of a patriotic order throughout.

THE Rev. Dr. House, late Missionary to Siam, and his wife, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Warner Ackerman, Scotch Plains.

MR. and Mrs. Doctor Dodd, and Miss Ward, of Newark, are occupying their summer residences at Scotch Plains.

Mr. Duyckinck, of Brooklyn, and Mr. Webster of the same city, with their families, are at their summer seats near Scotch Plains.

THE annual meeting of the Scotch Plains Mutual Theft Detecting Society, was held at Academy Hall in that place, on Monday evening, July 3d. After the transaction of the usual routine business, the following named gentlemen were elected Directors of the Society for the ensuing year, viz: Wm. B. S. Taylor, L. H. K. Smalley, Wm. H. Brower, Wm. Cooper, Theodore Ritter, and Geo. Kyte, after which the Board organized as follows: President, L. H. K. Smalley; Vice President, Wm. B. S. Taylor; Treasurer, Wm. H. Brower, and Secretary, O. M. Putman.

THE Centennial "Fourth" of our American Independence was celebrated at Scotch Plains with much fervor and enthusiasm. Business was entirely suspended, flags were everywhere displayed, and very many houses were profusely decorated with national emblems. The day was ushered in at midnight by the ringing of church, school and fire bells, the blowing of the steam whistles of the factories, and the thunders of the centennial cannon. This programme being repeated at sunrise "high twelve," and at sunset. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon, a public meeting was held in the Baptist Church, strictly in accordance with the programme as given in our last week's issue. The Historical Sketch by Rev. J. C. Buchanan, and the Oration by Rev. C. Y. Swan, of Newark, were both well received, and worthy of the occasion. The music, too, which was led by Prof. W. F. Sherwin and Mrs. Swan, was charming. In the evening there was a liberal display of fireworks.

On Thursday, the 6th inst., a very select party of young ladies and gentlemen from Westfield, Scotch Plains, Cranford and Plainfield, met in the Blankman Grove, on Midway avenue, in the latter place, and spent the whole day in picnicing, dancing, swinging, singing, croqueting and coquetting, and such divers other amusements as are consequent upon an occasion of the kind. Suffice it to say that the enjoyment of the party was all that could be desired.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Some of those Philanthropists who are devising plans for contributing to the comfort and improving the health of the poor, would find money expended in the purchase of Glenn's Sulphur Soap serviceable in bettering the physical condition of the latter.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY may be well called a "wonder of medical science." It cures coughs and colds instanter! It soothes the irritated parts; it heals the inflammation; and even consumption itself yields to its magic influence. 50 cts and $1 a bottle, large bottles much the cheaper.

WE ALL CONSIDER IRON the embodiment of strength and power, but how few are aware that it is this same element in the system that gives us strength and vigor, and that an insufficiency of it causes weakness and debility. The Peruvian Syrup, a protoxide of iron, is prepared expressly to supply this vitalizing element.

Scald head and numerous other diseases of the scalp, for the cure of which so many forms of ointment and plaster have been invented by medical men, can be simply and effectually remedied by washing the head with Glenn's Sulphur Soap. Sold everywhere.

My Friend

Are you aware of the fact that you are living in an age when Americans are celebrating the one hundredth Anniversary of their independence? Are you aware that one hundred years ago hardware men did not advertise "Mowing Machines?"—Are you aware that one hundred years ago there was no Central Railroad stock at 74 per cent? Are you aware that one hundred years ago the quickest way to send a telegram was to take it yourself? Are you aware that one hundred years ago the ladies did not wear bustles? Are you aware that one hundred years ago no such sign as "a schooner of lager for 3 cents" appeared in New York (we forget how it was with Jersey)? Are you aware that one hundred years ago you could not buy a pair of Shoes of JERUSALEM □ No. 26, A. F. & A. M., will confer the E. A. degree next Tuesday.

MR. ISAAC MILBURN has broken ground for the re-erection of Grace Church on 6th and Sycamore Sts.

No business was transacted at the meeting of Council last Monday evening. Adjourned to meet Saturday evening at 8 o'clock.

MR. FRAZEE'S saloon on 4th St., was visited by large numbers on the Fourth to test the superior article of French Cream made by him. It is pure and wholesome. Go try it.

BY request Rev. Dr. Vincent will repeat his oration delivered at Washington Rock July 4th, 1876, in the M. E. Church, next Sunday evening. He will also occupy the pulpit in the morning.

C. F. & E. W. Everett, whose neat store is attraction to those who prefer fresh articles in Gent's Wear to shop-worn stock, respectfully call the attention of the public to their advertisement of prices, which defy competition.

A HANDSOME silk flag was raised on the flag pole on Mr. Andrew Bache's premises at sunrise on the morning of July 4th, with appropriate ceremonies by members of the family. Songs were sung, cheers given, speeches made and toasts offered. We regret not having the space to give an extended notice of the ceremonies in this issue.

THE Crescent B. B. Club played an interesting game with the Staten Island Club on Saturday last, on their grounds, 9th St., and were defeated by a score of 5 to 2. On Tuesday they played with the Osceolas of Brooklyn, on the same grounds, the visiting club winning by a score of 16 to 7. The Crescents are composed of some of our best young men and play a fine game.

NOT to be behind the times, Mr. John W. Laing, proprietor of the popular Laing's Hotel, has recently thoroughly renovated his large dining room by re-papering, painting and kalsomining the same. Handsome wire screens have also been put up in each window. A new and substantial flooring has also been laid in the bar-room. This house is well filled with summer boarders.

Trotting.

There was a fine attendance at the trots on the Driving Park Grounds, July 4th.—The first trot for a purse of $75 between "Honest Billy," "Tom Scott," "Lucy" and "Belle A," was won by the latter, "Honest Billy" second. Time, 2:54, 2:51, 2:50, 2:53. The second race for a purse of $50 was won by "Lady Blanche" in three straight heats, against "Duke" and "Zeke Davis."—Time, 2:51, 2:51, 2:50½. During the race an accident occurred which might have proved more serious than it did. The horse driven by Mr. E. A. Campbell, fell on the track, throwing Mr. C. out of the sulky, several feet ahead, severely bruising him about the knees. "Lucy's" driver, who was following closely narrowly escaped collision with the fallen horse. There will be trotting between members' horses every Thursday hereafter.

Personals.

The two eldest sons of Capt. Jas. Parker last week passed creditable examinations for entrance into Columbia College, N. Y., where they expect to prepare for their life work.

Prof. Jno. P. Gross, A. M. Ph. D., who has so satisfactorily filled the position of Principal of our Public School, for the last two years, has been re-engaged for the ensuing year at a salary of $3,500. No action which the Board of Education could take would please the people of Plainfield more than securing the services of this efficient gentleman.

Mr. D. C. Green has rented his residence for the summer and with his family have emigrated to the sea shore in the vicinity of Long Branch.

Mr. A. T. Demarest of New York, a prominent manufacturer of fine carriages, has rented Mr. Humbert's house on the corner of Central ave. and 6th Sts.

Mr. G. F. Crater, formerly of Flemington, Hunterdon county, has taken the New Brunswick Hotel, opposite the depot, New Brunswick, and is meeting with more than anticipated success in his enterprise. Mr. C. understands how a hotel should be conducted.

Rev. Joseph Stockbridge and family have gone to Maine to spend a few weeks.

James Lyon, Principal of the School for Boys is spending his vacation at Greenwich, Conn.

We have been shown a copy of the odes sung at the Fourth of July celebration at Scotch Plains in 1823. They are the property of Mrs. Lyman Spencer.

The senior editor returns his thanks to the German Leider Tafel Society for the serenade given him the evening of July 3d. This Society also serenaded His Honor, Mayor Sutphen, Postmaster Vail and others. The singing was excellent and elicited applause from all who heard them. The rendering of the Star Spangled Banner in German was a novel feature, Mr. Henry Lauer is the leader of the Society.

FIRE MATTERS.

Chief Doane was the recipient of a beautiful 40 cone fire hat and Chief's belt by the members of Gazelle Engine Co. No. 1, on Monday evening last. The hat is painted white with silver plate on the back suitably engraved.

The residence of Mr. Hampton Wilds, Elizabeth, was burned on the morning of July 4th, and Mr. W. in attempting to save some of his household effects was burned to death.

A boy thoughtlessly set off a rocket among fireworks on the stand of Mr. E. D. Moffett, on Second Street, the afternoon of July 4th, and a general explosion was the result. An alarm of fire was given which called out No. 2 steamer. No occasion was however, needed of their services.

The decorations in front of Mr. D. W. Rogers' dwelling on Second St., caught fire from fire crackers during the afternoon of July 4th, but no alarm was raised.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

A large pile of brush heaped together near Vail's Spring, on the top of the mountain, was set on fire Monday evening precisely at 9 o'clock, due notice having been given to the firemen, so that no alarm should be given. The fire made a brilliant light and could be seen for a long distance.

The building of a stone arch bridge, 50 feet long, 30 feet span, over the brook at the junction of new Grove Street and Johnston Drive, was awarded to Wm. S. Potter last Saturday.

A man named Donohue struck at Constable Everett with a knife as that officer attempted to arrest him on Monday last, luckily only cutting the shirt on Mr. Everett. Breaking away from the officer he ran through Grove Street, across the bridge to the Union County side and was followed there by the officer and a posse summoned to his assistance. Here it was found necessary to knock Donohue down with a club before he could be taken. He was handcuffed and committed to Somerville jail to await trial.

THE NATION'S HOLIDAY.

JULY FOURTH, 1876.

The 100th Anniversary of America's National Independence was celebrated in Plainfield in true patriotic style. Although the time between the celebration and the hour when the idea of celebrating the 4th in Plainfield was first thought of by a few enterprising gentlemen, was short, we think those who witnessed the grand procession passing through our streets on Tuesday last will bear us out in the assertion that it was a highly creditable affair, and the committee deserve great credit for their efforts in making the same a success.

According to programme the various church bells and the Fire Alarm bell were rung at sunrise, while the brass piece of the Plainfield Artillery Company, under the supervision of Capt. Thomas McDonald, announced in thunder tones that the anniversary of the birth of our country had arrived. Before 7 o'clock the various organizations, &c., that were to participate in the parade began to gather on Cherry Street, and prompt on time, the Marshall of the day, Major R. K. Case, and his Aids, Walter W. Corriell, William Hand and John J. Perrine, had the procession in line, but a delay of some time was occasioned by the band not arriving, the train on which they had embarked being behind time. At five minutes past nine o'clock, a. m., the long line commenced to move, and to say it was a grand sight will but feebly express the opinion of the thousands of spectators that lined the sidewalks along the route.

The line was made up as follows: Platoon of Police; Com. of Arrangements, on foot; Band of 16 pieces; Co. E. drum corps; Co. E. 3d Reg. N. G. S. N. J. 35 men; Zephyr H. & L. Co. No. 1, 27 men; Plainfield Steamer No. 2, 31 men; Warren Eng. Co. No. 3, 18 men; Grand Chariot, containing 38 young ladies representing the several States of the Union. The following are the names of the misses representing the States on the chariot: Addie Gillette, Goddess, Julia Runyon, Justice, Jennie Sutphen, Historian; Carrie Maxson, Lizzie VanDuyn, Laura Moffett, Thurza Moore, Lizzie Taylor, Ella Bergen, Lillian Coward, Florence M. Clark, Sadie VanDuyn, Mary Vail, Jennie Ross, Sadie Grant, Lillie Chandler, Ella Moffett, Emily Groff, Katy Moffett, Maggie Warnock, Emma Martin, Mary Tomlinson, Annie Garretson, Lillie Wakefield, Maggie Randolph, Florence Taylor, Amelia Chaffee, Hettie Randolph, Jessie Holmes, Charlotte Haberlie, Carrie Randolph, Gussie Brokaw, Laura Randolph, Carriage containing Rev. J. P. Morris; Ancient Order of Hibernians, 65 men; St. Mary's T. A. B. Soc., 50 men; St. Aloysius Soc., 80 young lads; carriages containing His Honor, Mayor Sutphen, Rev. Dr. Smith, Treasurer A. Berry, Common Council, Fire Commissioners and Board of Education. Next came the trades.

The following is a complete list of those merchants of our city who participated in the parade, with wagons gaily decorated and emblems of their calling exhibited: W. W. Wooden, baker; N. Rogers & Son, grocers; Frazee's market with two of his sons dressed in centennial costume, one of them going through the motions of decapitating a monster live turtle; Spicer & Hubbard, exhibiting specimens of their beautiful mouldings; Coriell Bro's, butchers; Geo. Mehl, National Bakery; John Will, with a supply of his celebrated Pop Beer; E. R. Titsworth, operating a Washing Machine; J. C. Randolph, builder; Washington Park Milk Dairy wagon; Crane & Terrill, hatters; P. M. French & Son's, with samples of their "Ever Ready" Flour; Collier the Boss Jeweler; Frank Neal, butcher, with two wagons—one of them driven by Mr. Parkinson, had a novel feature in the shape of a live lamb standing along side the driver, while on the seat beside him was a little child, on the dash board of the wagon appeared the words "Mary had a Little Lamb." Hyder, the bottler of cool lager, was out with a couple of kegs of Milwaukee beer on tap, which he generously dispensed to the crowd as he went along; James M. Dunn, grocer, wagon finely decorated; P. M. Demarest, the grocer, wagon handsomely trimmed, and a game rooster confined in a cage hung in front of the vehicle. The bird announced that he was a game bird by shrill peals of defiance along the route; Clifton & Vail, grocers, looking fine; L. D. Jones, of Egg Powder fame; L. M. French, with a specimen of his handsome work, in the shape of a carriage mounted on a truck; Peter Dunn, butcher; A. V. Searing, teas; Henry Hand, blacksmith—on a truck was mounted a beautiful live horse, whose feet under went the process of shoeing during the march by workmen of Mr. Hand's who had all the appliances for the work at hand; THE CONSTITUTIONALIST office was represented by a Gordon Press operated upon by "Cookie," who was dressed in Continental uniform. The press was trimmed in red, white and blue. Along the route the pressman threw out circulars printed on the press. A Vanderbeek, the dealer in musical instruments also occupied a portion of the same truck with one of the celebrated Domestic organs from which Master Ad. TenEyck drew forth sweet music during the line of march; Lebeus Manning, the monument and mantel man, came next, with specimens of his skill exhibited; H. C. Randolph, the fruit grower; David Leeson, with his new casket wagon. A beautiful crown of flowers from Haine's conservatory occupied a prominent position in the wagon; Geo. Demeza, two wagons, with a display of goods in George's line, rag, tin and iron ware; Pettibone's Union Planing and Moulding Mill, exhibiting specimens of their work; Terhune, the Shoe man, with a fine display of boots and shoes; Warnock the baker, with workmen engaged in turning out rolls and biscuit; M. A. Haine's, Florist, with a fine display of flowers; Berry & Thorn, the "old reliable" dealers in stoves, hardware, &c. This firm had workmen engaged in manufacturing articles from tin, each man having a head gear made from tin, even "Abe" being provided with a tin hat, his face shining like ebony; J. Voehl, baker; Wm. Shotwell, grocer, two wagons; Hoagland's Express; on the seat with the driver sat "Jerry" the tried and true U. S. Mail carrier with his mail bag on his lap; John Kane, the fish man, who had his family in his wagon, thus killing two birds with one stone, representing his business and allowing his family to take a ride and see the sights.

Along the entire route the procession was greeted with cheers and waving of flags and handkerchiefs. Upon the conclusion and arrival of the procession at the beautiful Seminary Grove, on 8th Street, the exercises were opened by the Rev. Dr. Smith in prayer, after which Hon. Judge Runyon read the Declaration of Independence, followed by Mr. C. E. Woodruff, of Dunellen, who delivered the Oration of the day.

At noon and sunset, the bells were again rung and a salute fired from the cannon, while in the evening a grand display of fireworks were given on the vacant lot corner of Central Avenue and Eight Street, which was witnessed and applauded by thousands of spectators.

Never before in the history of Plainfield has there been as much bunting and decorations displayed at one time as there was on the day we celebrated, July 4th, 1876. Every house in the city had something in the way of red, white and blue displayed. Among the many residences and places of business decorated worthy of especial mention we make note of the following coming under our observation: The Post Office, Frazee's Market, Jeremiah VanWinkles' residence, where was displayed an ancient trumpet, the property of Wm. J. Roome, and handed down to him from his ancestor, Peter Roome. The trumpet was formerly used by the captain of No. 7 fire engine company, of N. Y. in 1774. Also, a Revolutionary banner and handkerchief belonging to the Van Winkle family, made in 1778.

In front of Justice John T. Lee's residence on Central Ave., a fine sight was presented, that of three small children, two of whom were Mr. Lee's boy and girl, dressed in red, white and blue, standing on the green sward in front of the house, the boy holding a drawn sword in his hand over his shoulder while the two girls held flags.

On the railing of the balcony at Mr. Andrew Bache's residence, on Cherry St., we noticed three young girls dressed in star spangled costume, standing erect as statutes, holding in their hands the Stars and Stripes. It was a pretty sight and caused applause from the processionists.

In front of the residence of Julian Scott, the artist, was stretched the old battle torn regimental flag of Sedgwick's Sixth Corps, which is in keeping of Mr. Scott. The battle flags of the 3d Vermont Regiment of which Mr. S. was a member, were also hung in front of the dwelling.

The illuminations during the evening was very general and fine especially at the residence of Messrs. A. Bache, David Boice, the Post Office, W. L. Jones, Russel Johnson, Alfred Berry, Alex. Titsworth.

The chariot containing the young ladies representing the States, was driven by Peter Rickert. The car, with the living freight was a beautiful sight and reflects good credit upon the committee who had the matter in charge, Mrs. Peck, Miss M. M. Rocap, Mrs. Bogart, Mrs. Terhune, with Mr. Lewis E. Clark as chairman of the committee. The Goddess of Liberty on the car was represented by Miss Addie Gillette, the Historian by Miss Jennie Sutphen, and Law and Justice by Miss Runyon, with credit alike to all.

The "Zephyr" truck was handsomely decorated, one feature being a little girl, a daughter of Foreman Davis, dressed to represent the Goddess of Liberty, seated on top of the ladders in the middle of the truck, while in the rear stood a young lad, Master Will Ryder, in Continental style. The boys made a fine appearance. Two milk white horses drew the truck, driven by Frank Vreeland.

No 2 steamer was drawn by horses, the men drawing their hose carriage in the rear. Warren No. 3 turned out without their apparatus, making a fine appearance.

Much credit and praise is due the Committee who have labored so zealously the past three weeks to make our centennial parade what it was—a success, both in looks and numbers. They have met with many difficulties which had to be overcome, but no obstacle was allowed to stand in their way. Success was the motto, and a success it was.

A noticeable feature of the day was the absence of drunkenness on the streets and accidents. Not a single arrest was made by the police of Plainfield on that day, and not an accident occurred so far as we have heard.

The Washington Rock Celebration.

The Centennial Fourth of July was celebrated at Washington Rock in a manner worthy of the time and place.

About the hour named in programme, the President of the day, Nathan Harper, called the large assemblage to order, whereupon the Rev. Theodore S. Brown, of Dunellen, offered up a most beautiful and touching prayer.

Mr. Harper then made the following opening address:

FELLOW CITIZENS:

As President of an Association organized for the purpose of rearing upon this historic eminence a monument to the illustrious Washington, I have been assigned the honor of presiding on the present occasion. The day—the Centennial of a deed that founded the American Republic, and the locality—one of Freedom's immortal watch towers, combine to here arouse feelings of earnest patriotism, which will receive just and eloquent utterance from our esteemed friend, orator of the day. The President of the United States, in a recent proclamation, invited the people everywhere to blend with the usual celebration of this grand anniversary devout thanksgiving to Almighty God. That was a most commendable request, because, the truth cannot be too often remembered, and neither can it be too seriously pondered, that the darkness of the Revolutionary struggle was transformed into the brightness of victory by a power mightier than human. Some months ago, Congress by resolution suggested the preparation, during the Centennial year, of local histories. In furtherance of that view, the Washington Monument and Historical Association requested Mr. E. S. Bailey, a young gentleman connected with journalism, and at present residing in Plainfield, to collect and arrange the annals of Washington Rock for publicity at the present time. He has admirably done his work, as the manuscript I hold in my hand evidences. With your permission I will read it. His chosen title is:

Incidents Relating to Washington Rock and Vicinity, prepared by E. S. BAILEY, at the request of the Washington Monument and Historical Association of Plainfield, N. J.

It is the object of this paper to record briefly the incidents relating to the history of Washington Rock, and the principal points of local interest connected with the Revolutionary times and scenes in its vicinity.

The plain below is but an immense field upon which took place some of the most decisive struggles during the long and sanguinary war, and the local interest in the Rock is largely increased by the great number of historic spots that can be seen from it. The full history of the place will always be like a story that is but half told. We can find something of it in the printed pages of County and State records, there is much also in reliable tradition, but the great wealth of detail and local incident, which at the present time would be of so much interest and importance, has never been recorded and so has perished with its authors. Tradition asserts that Washington sought this Rock, because it was a "sightly place." Situated as it is on the brow of First Mountain, being one of the parallel ranges of the alleghany system that cross the State of New Jersey from Pennsylvania to New York, it commands a vision of 30 miles, or more East, South and West. Standing in the Co. of Somerset, back of Dunellen, and not far from the city of Plainfield, it has an elevation of about five hundred feet above the plain below it, and is twenty-five feet in height and from thirty to forty feet in circumference. The scene from the Rock is one of uncommon beauty. The plain below lies as level as a map. On the left appear the spires of New York City, part of its bay, Newark, Elizabethtown, Rahway and New Brighton. Directly in front are Amboy and Raritan bays. To the right New Brunswick and the heights of Princeton and Trenton, and far to the Southeast the eye stretches over the plains of Monmouth to the highlands of Neversink.

From this spot we can trace the line of march of both the American and British armies as they twice passed through the state from the bay to the Delaware. It is well said "that few States have more Revolutionary relics and few are richer in Revolutionary consequences than New Jersey," and it is a pardonable pride on the part of her citizens in this particular locality, that of all the relics left none like theirs overlook so many others. At no place was Washington's heart made to rejoice more than as he stood upon this peak, and with glass in hand, watched the British fleet of two hundred and seventy transports, that filled Amboy bay, leave its anchorage and loose itself to sight in the great sea beyond. Then he knew that victory, full and complete, had crowned his arms in the Jersey's. No prouder moment had he than when he realized that this victory had been snatched from defeat, that the State had been saved to the cause of freedom and independence, and a haughty and superior foe had been humiliated, and for safety had fled his presence. Of the Rock itself but little can be said, could it change mute impersonality, and relate all its own history and the scenes enacted upon the plain below, then only would it be complete. It would tell of a thousand events full of interest, but the most prized incident of all would be its story of the visits of the great Washington.

The connecting events of the Revolutionary struggle in New Jersey are as follows: On the fifteenth of June, 1775, Washington received the appointment from Congress as the General in Chief of the Continental army. The opening battles of the war had been fought in New England before he assumed command. Faithfully aided by the militia and the patriotic yeomanry, he was in time able to drive the British forces from Boston and vicinity. A year later, June 29th, 1776, we find him in New York City, when he writes to Congress, as follows: "I have received information from the Hook that about fifty of the enemy's fleet have arrived there and others are now in sight, and there can be no doubt but the whole fleet will be in this day and to-morrow"—(Spark's Washington, vol III. page 445-6). Washington again writes from New York on July 4th, 1776, "The camp (British) will be in the neighborhood of Amboy, the disaffection of that people and others not far distant is exceedingly great." So when Gen. Howe landed his soldiers on the 2nd, and 3rd of July, they were welcomed by the inhabitants as deliverers and every assistance was rendered them. Staten Island then became the rendezvous for British sympathizers, tories and cowards. The temper of the New Jersey soldiers had not been tried, and Gen. Howe little thought that only the river separated him from his deadly enemy.

On this day one hundred years ago, this imperious commander looked with contempt upon the miserable army that stood upon the opposite banks to oppose his invasion. Miserable it may have been, we shall yet see that it was nevertheless victorious. On this day one hundred years ago, by declaration of Congress, the entire invading army were branded a foreign foe. The contest was no longer a civil war. Rebels were changed to patriots and loyalists to traitors. The struggle henceforth was for self existence and self government. Neutrality was no longer to be tolerated, either King or Congress should rule. "The House of Hanover was dethroned and Congress did rule. The day before this declaration the British paraded their forces near Elizabeth Town Point, which called forth this letter from General Livingston to General Washington "We have between four and five hundred at the Point, who have thrown up a line from the Point House eastward to answer as a cover. We have two field pieces, with a part of the company of artillery of this Province. Our men are raw and inexperienced, our officers mostly absent, while we are greatly exposed for the distance of twelve or thirteen miles." (History of Elizabeth, page 436.). The two field pieces here mentioned soon gave a good report of themselves, for we read from a letter dated at midnight, July 4th, 1776, as follows: "One of the enemy's armed sloops of fourteen guns having this evening run up near Elizabeth Point, was attacked from the shore with two twelve pounders, a great number of her men killed, she set on fire and entirely destroyed." (American Archives VI 1272.) "As this must have occurred just about the time the Declaration of Independence was adopted by Congress, or within two or three hours of that event, it was probably the first military exploit of the new-born nation, and an auspicious omen of its career." (Hist. of Elizabeth p. 438.)

The British fleet increased during this month to a hundred and thirty sail, and a land force of quite twenty thousand soldiers. The British did not succeed in invading New Jersey, and we find that, in the following month they had gone to possess themselves of the fortified places on Long Island and the Hudson. In that attempt they were successful, and on the 15th of September, 1776, the American forces evacuated N. Y. City and left it in possession of the enemy. Forts Washington and Lee, on the Hudson, were the next places to fall into the hands of the invader, the former November 16th and the latter two days after.

The British had now successfully invaded New Jersey, and the Americans were obliged to retreat at every advance of the invaders. If we note carefully this retreat, we shall see that every movement of the troops under Washington gave evidence of his great generalship. "From Fort Lee to the edge of Pennsylvania," writes Thomas Paine, "with a handful of men we sustained an orderly retreat for near an hundred miles, brought off our ammunition, all our field-pieces, the greatest part of our stores, and had four *rivers to pass. None can say that our re*treat was precipitate, for we were three weeks in performing it. Twice we marched back to meet the enemy and remained out until dark. The sign of fear was not seen in our camp." (Irving's Washington II p. 436.) Washington's army was at this time composed of not more than thirty-five hundred men, and was pursued by a chosen force of the British twice or three times its size, under the immediate command of Lord Cornwallis. The line of retreat was from Newark, through Elizabeth and Rahway to Brunswick, thence to Princeton and Trenton. Concerning this retreat a British Officer wrote as follows: "To suffer the shattered remains of the Rebel troops, a set of naked, dispirited fugitives, encumbered with baggage, to run a race of ninety miles and outstrip the flower of the British army, three times their number, appears to be an omission not to give it another name, without example." (Hall's Civil War in America, p. 216.)

History affirms that the British in pursuing the retreating army gave themselves to wanton liberties of every kind. "They plundered friend and foe, they warred upon defenceless youth and old age, they suffered prisoners to perish for want of sustenance, they mangled the dying weltering in their own blood, they violated the chastity of women, disfigured and burned dwellings and churches." (Livingston's letter, Feb. 25, 1777.) Thus, within sight of this Rock, have been enacted all the atrocities of a barbarous warfare.

General Howe having driven Washington across the Delaware river, waited only for the freezing of its waters that he might cross and drive him still further. The Americans were on the opposite banks recruiting and using every endeavor to begin an aggressive warfare. It is hardly in place to detail here the incidents of the recrossing of the Delaware by the American forces, and the capture of the Hessians at the battle of Trenton, December 26, 1776. Hope was once more given to Washington and his army, and the battle of Trenton proved to be the turning point of the fortunes of the Americans.—On the 1st of January, 1777, Washington again took possession of Trenton, and on the following day Lord Cornwallis advanced from Brunswick towards Trenton, and threatened on the next morning to "bag the fox" and make an end of the war. At dark that night the armies were separated only a short distance, the Assanpink creek marking the dividing line. This was a night of intense anxiety to our commander; retreat was impossible, the floating ice in the Delaware rendered its passage suicidal, and before him, was an army twice his numbers and splendidly equipped. But he was equal to the task of solving the problem of saving his army and bringing victory from almost positive defeat. At midnight he quietly withdrew his entire army and the morning's sun found him attacking the British guards at Princeton, several miles in the rear of the main army. Washington gained a victory by this brilliant retreat. There was one more prize within his grasp, should he reach for it? One more victory and the cause would be his; the capture of the British stores and baggage at Brunswick would make his victory complete, but on the other hand, a defeat there would bring a lasting triumph to his foes. Here the humanity and wisdom of Washington again asserts itself. His troops were fatigued by their rapid march all night and hard fight in the morning. "All of them had been one night without sleep, some of them two, and many were half starved. They were without blankets, thinly clad, some of them barefooted and this in freezing weather." Under these circumstances, he turned from the glittering prize at Brunswick and decided to make Morristown his headquarters. He knew well the advantage this position among the hills would give him. Filing off to the left from Kingston, Washington took the narrow road from Rocky Hill to Pluckamin, where he halted for a few days to give rest to his army. The British returned to Brunswick for their winter quarters. From this time, Jan. 5th, 1777, until the last of June many incidents of local interest were happening within the radius of ten miles of the Rock.

Permit me here, without attempting an accurate chronology, to relate some items of interest that I have been enabled to collect. It is not improbable that a portion of the soldiers, so thinly clad and so famished, who had fought at Princeton, were cared for in the houses then standing on Quaker Road and distant only two or three miles from this spot. It is a common story told in that section that American soldiers were lodged in the houses surrounding Middlebrook. The accounts confuse some, as in the hard winter of 1778-79, when the Americans were again encamped at Middlebrook, the inhabitants were assigned a certain number of soldiers to lodge each night, but there is little doubt that the soldiers were cared for both winters.

I am indebted to Mr. Ephraim Vail, of Green Brook, for the following information: Mr. Vail's was the first two story house built this side of Brunswick Landing and is now more than one hundred years old. Mr. Vail is a much esteemed resident, aged ninety-three years, and known to be the oldest man in his township. His house was the one nearest to the Rock for long years. He remembers hearing his father tell of a visit made in this vicinity by three or four men, who came from Long Island to see friends. They were met by one John Marcellus (whose grave is now by the road side between Evona and Dunellen) who told them that if they "didn't mind they would be arrested as spies," and directed them to Mr. Vail's barn for safety. Marcellus immediately reported them to the soldiers, who arrested them. One was shot as a spy, the chestnut tree standing in the open lot, a little back from the Green Brook road and between the two houses now occupied by Mr. Vail and Mr. Sandford, marks the spot of this execution. The others were sent to the General at Morristown. Mr. Vail also says that the honor of having shown Washington this rock as a "sightly place" belongs to one Edward Fitz Randolph, of Piscataway, a man of some local fame during Revolutionary times, who led the way to the rock on a horse furnished him by Washington. The descendants of this man are now living near the old homestead.

The situation of the inhabitants during the first half of the year 1777 was exciting enough. Skirmishes more or less severe were of almost daily occurrence. Every foraging party of either army, venturing a few miles into the country, were almost sure of being attacked. In this kind of warfare the Americans are spoken of as being very successful, because of their knowledge of the country. During the months of January, February and March there were several engagements of note.—"On Sunday, January 5, 1777, there was an encounter at Spanktown, (now Rahway) in which the militia succeeded in taking some prisoners without loss" (Spark's Washington IV—264). On January 20th, there was an encounter between 450 Americans and 600 British at Millstone River; the Americans were victorious. February 1st and 26th, April 23rd and May 10th are also dates upon which battles were fought near Amboy and Piscataway. During the stay of the army in the vicinity of the Rock, portions of them are said to have camped for a few days at a time upon the lot now at the corner of Second and William Streets, in the City of Plainfield, also upon what is known as the Compton farm near Evona, and also upon the Stelle Runyon farm in New Market. It is also probable that many of the soldiers of both armies have marched through Front Street, Plainfield, some of them several times, as it was the only road running parallel with the brook and the mountain. Washington once paid a visit to the house built by Nathaniel Drake in 1764, and now owned by Mr. John S. Harberger. He was seen at this house by Elizabeth Stelle and Mrs. Joel Dunn, both relatives of Mr. Daniel Drake, now living.

There are records of an engagement at the bridge where the streams coming together form the Rahway river, on the road from Elizabeth to Morristown, near Springfield. It is interesting also to record here that a volunteer company was formed in this vicinity, and furnished by the patriotic women with tow frocks and pantaloons dyed blue.—From their singular appearance, and also their singular efficiency in the day of trial, they earned for the State the appellation of "Jersey Blues."

Following this there was an engagement at Scotch Plains, and an old-house once belonging to the Mesker property, near Dog Tavern, was riddled with bullets by skirmishers. There are also evidences of an encounter on the farm of Benjamin Lane, now know as Wm. D. T. Lane's farm. It is also asserted, that at nearly every cross-road within a radius of twenty miles, there was sometime during the war, some fighting.

Toward the end of May 1777, Washington broke up his cantonments and shifted his camp from Morristown to Middlebrook. His force now fit for duty was 7,300 men, divided into ten brigades. Here Washington fortified himself in a position naturally strong among these hills. The stories say that Long Hill, distant a few miles from this spot, was a camping ground at that time.

I will here venture the suggestion, that from the arrival of Washington, May 28th, until the disappearance of the British, June 30th, he was a frequent visitor at this rock. I find no positive history giving me this authority, but a frequent remark in all the histories suggesting it, as, "On the 25th of June Washington was on the rock watching the engagement of the soldiers commanded by General Stirling as they skirmished with Lord Cornwallis, and at various times he resorted to this place to ascertain the movements of the enemy."—(Hist. Coll. N. J., 909). "Washington knew well the advantage of these hills and watched every movement of the enemy."—(Hist. of Elizabeth). "June 13th, being apprised of a movement of General Howe, Washington at daybreak reconnoitered the enemy from the height before the camp."—(Irving's Washington, III.—p. 78). "He knew every move of the red coats." "He saw the transports leave the bay, &c." I believe that for more than a month this good man and brave general, by frequent visits, honored this place that now bears his name. From the 14th to the 27th of June, General Howe and his officers, by marchings and countermarchings, feints, and circuitous movements attempted to draw Washington from these heights, but to no purpose. One division of the British advanced to Quibbletown, (now New Market) and another to Westfield, but failing to put to route the Americans, they retreated towards Amboy, burning and plundering everything before them. "Their repeated failures, their precipitate retreat, harassed and hunted by a half-disciplined militia, and a mere rustic levy, formed an ignominious close to the British campaigns in the Jerseys."

It was now the beautiful season of the year, and from these heights Washington saw a fertile and well cultivated country spread before him, and notwithstanding the new cares imposed upon him of still pursuing the enemy, "his yeoman soldiery and the Jersey militia were not forgotten, it was their harvest time, the State being evacuated, there was no immediate call for their services, he therefore dismissed almost the whole of them to their homes."—Irving's Washington III.—p. 82.

One hundred years have passed since the Revolutionary General here watched and prayed for national success. His prayers were answered. Victory crowned his anxious labors. His country has become the giant of nations. The rock where he stood still greets the rising sun, and what more fitting spot, or nobler patriotism, than there to raise an enduring monument to the memory of the greatest of Americans—George Washington.

Judge Peter T. Good, to whom was assigned the reading of the Declaration of Independence, discharged that duty in a masterly style.

The orator of the day, Rev. John H. Vincent, D. D., was then introduced and at once proceeded, with his usual eloquence and power of argument, to deliver one of the best orations that ever fell from mortal lips. The remarks of Doctor Vincent commanded universal approval, and we hope to obtain a report of them for future publication.

The exercises closed with the Benediction by Rev. Mr. Brown.

Music lent its charms at stated intervals, and good order and close attention governed the audience throughout. The celebration was a fine affair, and in the afternoon the number of visitors at the Rock was immense.

Public School Commencement.

The Plainfield Public School held its 6th Annual Commencement last Thursday night in the spacious Congregational Church.—The exercises consisted of speeches and essays by the Graduating Class, interspersed with music by Grafulla and terminated, after the presentation of diplomas and prizes, with an address by the Hon. John Davidson, of Elizabeth.

The occasion attracted a very large audience, who endured with commendable patience the great heat of the atmosphere and the extreme length of the exercises; and yet it is almost impossible to shorten such a programme materially and still fulfill the requirements of a Commencement. Our colleges recognize this fact, and devote the major portion of the day to its completion; but in a city such as ours, where so large a proportion of the citizens who are supposed to be most heartily in sympathy with the school-work are absent during the day, it is somewhat impracticable, and hence the evening session is accepted as an alternative.

If space would permit, it would prove a source of great pleasure to us to dilate upon the appearance and character of the audience, one of the largest and best that ever convened in our city; and it evinced such a just appreciation of the efforts which were put forth by the Graduating class for their entertainment, that the occasion must have been one of extreme gratification for those directly concerned in the management of the School.

The arrangements for seating the people were well considered. But few seats were reserved, and these mainly for the County and City Officials and immediate relatives of the Graduating Class. The remainder being free to all who possessed tickets of admission. It has been the annual custom in order to avoid confusion and discomfort, to restrict the size of the audience to the capacity of the Church, and hence tickets to all available seats have been issued and placed in the hands of the Board of Education and Mr. L. E. Clark for distribution. The principle governing which, invariably having been, "first come, first served."

Upon the platform, which was very handsomely decorated, were the Hon. John Davidson, of Elizabeth, Mayor Sutphen and Judge E. W. Runyon, of this city, together with the Principal, Prof. Jno. P. Gross, Ph. D., and all the members of the Board of Education, with the exception of Mr. John W. Murray, who, we were informed, was attending Yale College Commencement with his eldest son, whom we remember as the recipient of the first prize in the oratorical contest of 1875.

The Graduating Class comprised 10 students—3 young ladies and 7 gentlemen, all of whom acquitted themselves in a creditable manner.

The following is the order of exercises:

12 Class History and Prophecy. Annie W. Boorsam

THIRD HONOR.

13 Valedictory .... Everett D. Burr
Music—Doctrinen .... Strauss
*Excused.

The first speaker, Mr. Walter M. McGee, displayed many of the qualifications of a true orator, and in the Collegiate career to which we understand he aspires, will no doubt obtain distinction.

We were also very much pleased with the concise, well-written production of Mr. Frank W. Runyon, whose clear and well-modulated voice could be heard by the entire audience.

The first honor was awarded to Mr. Lafayette Angleman, who delivered an extremely well-written essay upon Plainfield, tracing its origin, growth and progress. It was of course very interesting to the audience and received much applause. A prominent and appropriate feature of the paper was the history of the School from its birth in 1848 with $100 as its annual income, and Dr. Stillman as Township Superintendent of Schools, to its flourishing condition in 1876 with over $19,000 as income and the same worthy gentleman as President of the Board of Education.

The second honor was awarded to Miss Annie W. Boorsam, whose clear enunciation and winning manners commended her warmly to the audience.

The Valedictory, by Mr. Everett D. Burr, was well-expressed and well received. He is a forcible, self-possessed speaker and gives evidence of careful training.

After the presentation of Diplomas, by the President of the Board, Dr. Stillman, the Oratorical Prizes were presented by Capt. Jas. Barber in the following effective speech:

The Committee have deputed me to make, in their name, this award. I can assure you that we have never been charged with a more embarrassing duty. At first, we felt inclined to regret that there were not thirteen prizes, for, where the excellence of the contestants was so general, it seemed [illegible] should be rewarded; but then we [illegible] to think that our duty was limited to the choice of four only, instead of the determination of the relative merits of thirteen. And here let me, not only on behalf of the Committee, but of the whole audience present [illegible] who were [illegible] It was an exhibition you may each and all be proud to have taken a part in. You all seemed to have acted in the spirit [illegible] "[illegible] every one [illegible]" and yet, it seemed to us, only in the spirit of kindly emulation; that spirit [illegible] by those other words of the Apostle—"In honor, preferring one another."

To you who are to receive the prizes, permit me to say that we hope you will treasure them [illegible] many years. When you shall have passed from the halls of your school into the cares and anxieties of life, let them be to you remembrances of the happy spring-time of youth; a time to which we can all look back with pleasure, no matter what God's Providence may since have laid upon us. To the parents who were there, and are here present, we [illegible] [illegible] the children of the rich and poor, of the [illegible] or native born [illegible] [illegible] of the waters that flow from the fountain of knowledge.

To you parents and friends, we would say [illegible] [illegible] Treasure than your Common School! So all in your power to encourage the Teacher and teachers, and as these children grow up into men and women, we shall, of a truth be able to say, "Our sons have grown up as the young plants, and our daughters are become as the polished corners of the Temple!"

Mr. Jacob Kirkner then announced the remainder of the prizes in a very appropriate manner. After which the Hon. John Davidson, of Elizabeth, made a timely and brilliant address, congratulating the people of our city upon many things of which she ought to be justly proud, not the least of which should be that bulwark of Liberty—the Public School. And very soon, after the close of his remarks, the 6th Annual Commencement was a thing of the past. Appended is a list of the prizes:

Prizes in Speaking—First Prizes, offered by the Principal, Miss Hattie H. Winslow and Master Everett D. Burr. Second Prizes, offered by members of the Committee of Award, Miss Bessie Kenyon and Master Chas. W. Van Slyck.

Prizes for best English Composition, offered by Mr. E. M. Brown, formerly a member of the Board of Education.—First Prize, M. Lafayette Angleman. Second Prize, Miss Annie W. Townsend.

Prize for best examination in U. S. History, offered by Mr. John W. Murray.—Prize, Oscar T. Roberts. Honorable Mention, Frederick Ruttman.

Prizes offered by the Board of Education to those pupils who in each of their respective classes, in the High and Intermediate Departments, should reach the highest standard for the year in scholarship, Deportment and Attendance.

HIGH SCHOOL.

Senior Class, Annie W. Boorsam. Junior Class, Walter B. Thompson. Third Class, Kittie Kaufman. Fourth Class, George E. Vincent.

INTERMEDIATE.

First Class, Carrie L. Nodyne. Second Class, First Division, Eliza B. Gorman. Second Class, Second Division, Fanny L. Runyon. Third Class, Lola Kaufman.—Fourth Class, Fifth Street, Clara V. Rose and Mary E. Robinson. Fourth Class, Fourth Street, Leona L. Burdick.

In addition to the prizes given this year and to be repeated next year, two prizes were offered by the President of the Board of Education, Dr. C. H. Stillman, to the Senior Class, for the best examination in all the branches of Mathematics in the Course of Study, five problems in each to be given. The prizes to be $15 and $10 in gold.

Proceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders.

ELIZABETH, June 28, 1876.

Pursuant to adjournment the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union assembled at their room in the Court House, at eleven o'clock, a. m., all the members being present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

There being no report from committees, new business was taken up.

By Freeholder Randolph:

Resolved, That the Elizabeth Freie Zeitung be allowed the same compensation for publishing the last Collector's Report as is allowed other papers in the county.

The yeas and nays being called for, the resolution was adopted by the following vote:

Messrs. Ayers (Wm.), Briant, Crane, Devlan, Randolph, Runkle, Russell, Ryder, Smith and Winans in the affirmative; and Messrs. Ayres (Samuel), Baldwin, Isenman, Martine and Pierson in the negative.

By Freeholder Martine;

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to report upon the necessity and the probable cost of re-building the bridge on Springfield road, near the residence of Ephraim Clark, deceased.

Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee Messrs. Martine, Doty, Devlan, Runkle and Briant.

By Freeholder Winans:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to report to this Board the probable cost and on the necessity of enlarging the culvert on Pearl street, in the city of Elizabeth, between Race street and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee Messrs. Winans, Baldwin and Crane.

The County Attorney then being present, Freeholder Baldwin moved that his opinion be heard in relation to the Summit bridge, which was referred to him at the last meeting.

The County Attorney then read his opinion on the matter, and on motion, by Freeholder Randolph, it was received and placed on file.

By Freholder Briant:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to meet at the Summit on Friday, June 30, 1876, at 11, a. m., to take into consideration the necessity of repairing the iron bridge over the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and building wing walls to the same, and to report to this Board the probable cost.

Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee Messrs. Briant, Runkle, Ryder, Isenman and Winans.

By Freeholder Randolph:

Resolved, That when this Board adjourns it be to meet four weeks from this day—11, a. m., July 12, 1876.

Adopted.

There being no further business, the Board then adjourned.

JOHN M. WELDON, Clerk.

The State Board of Education met at the State House, Trenton, Thursday last, and elected the following County Superintendents of Public Schools:

Warren County—Ephraim Dietrich, re-elected.

Mercer County—William J. Gibby, re-elected.

Hunterdon County—R. S. Swackhamer, elected, vice Cornelius C. Conkling, who declined.

Middlesex County—Ralph Willis, re-elected.

Essex County—Charles M. Davis, re-elected.

A day or two since a woman living at the upper end of King street, Gloucester city, dropped her pocketbook, containing $40, in her yard. A goat in the vicinity espied the book before the woman had discovered her loss, and snatching it up deliberately chawed and swallowed the wallet and its contents, despite desperate efforts made to prevent it.

Out of 800 convicts in the New Jersey State Prison 200 are now employed in the shoemaking department, with a prospect of adding 75 more in a few days. There will probably be work for most of the convicts if business should take a start, an event to which thousands outside of prisons are looking with great interest.

The other day a Burlington lady visiting the Centennial took the Philadelphia street car for the grounds. A little girl having no seat, and being a bright, diligent child, the lady took her on her lap. After a while the child left the car. Upon arriving at her place of destination the lady missed her pocket-book containing a hundred dollars, a gold chain and other valuables.

A sensation was created at Flanders, Morris County, on Tuesday night of last week, by the arrival of the first locomotive that ever visited that place. It came on the Longwood Valley Railroad, the track is now completed from High Bridge to Flanders, a distance of sixteen miles, and is proceeding toward Point Oram at the rate of half a mile a day.

A few days ago Richard Kirby found on his place North of Woodstown a land terrapin, that bore on his shell this old time marking: "D. P., 1816."—Kirby supposes that Daniel Pedrick, a resident in the vicinity sixty years ago, cut the inscription.

The Drew property at Madison is to be sold on the 9th day of August. Over 200 acres of beautifully situated land will be offered. The property has one or two small houses upon it and a thrifty young forest. It is quite convenient to the depot and has an enormous road front.

Farmers state that throughout Camden and adjoining counties the potato bugs have very suddenly disappeared, and many fields are being re-planted, under the hope that they will not return. Most of the early crops were plowed up.

WHAT THE PEOPLE ARE ASKED TO BE GRATEFUL FOR AND TO COMMEND.

The Republican platform, on which Hayes and Wheeler stand, declares that the Administration merits commendation, and President Grant deserves hearty gratitude: For what?

For the Crooked Whiskey frauds.

For the unnumbered railroad jobs and swindles.

For the Leet and Stocking-Murphy Custom House frauds.

For the Post Office straw bid frauds.

For the Navy contract frauds.

For the Freedmen's Saving Bank swindle.

For the Secret Service frauds—paying John I. Davenport thousands of dollars from the people's treasury to elect the Republican ticket.

For the Schenck Emma Mine frauds and disgrace.

For the Belknap soldier gravestone frauds.

For the Belknap post-trader frauds.

For the District Ring "Boss" Shepherd frauds.

For the Indian Ring frauds.

For the Safe Burglary villainy and Babcock and Harrington.

For the Credit Mobilier infamy.

For the St. Domingo job.

For "Landaulet" Williams and his infamy.

For Casey, Orvil Grant and Company.

For the fraud in the sale of arms to France.

For corruption in every department of the Federal Government.

For increasing the salaries of the President and other public officers.

For increasing the burdens of the taxpayers, and blocking every effort at Retrenchment and Reform.

If the people agree with the declaration of the Republican party in Convention that these things are to be commended, can they expect anything else than a continuance of them?

The bill for the equalization of soldiers' bounties has passed the House by a large majority, 114 to 46. Most of the ex-Confederates voted for it. It provides for the payment to all soldiers and to the heirs of those dead, $8 per month for every month's service in the army during the war, deducting amounts already received. The bill was killed in the last Senate.

When Hayes was in Congress he was conspicuous for having bartered the appointments in his District after the manner of a machine politician and in perfect contempt of the civil service rules the "Reformers" talk so much about. Yet, says the Albany Argus, "this man without record as a statesman is now brought forward, to quiet the Reform Republican sentiment of the country, and to appease the wrath of the anti-Administration masses of the party!"

The Cincinnati Commercial (Rep.) understands the matter exactly. It says of Hayes:

"He will reward his friends, remembering those who remembered him in good time, and the party machine will not be disturbed in its regular revolutions."

That will suit those who want things to go on at Washington as they have been going on. But what say those who think there ought to be a change?

New Jersey would be paying a merited compliment to an illustrious patriot by sending George B. McClellan to the United States Senate. It looks now indeed, as if he might be the successor of Senator Frelinghuysen, whose term expires the 4th of March next.

NEW JERSEY Enamel Paint Company,

RARITAN, NEW JERSEY.
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either in side or outside work or boat painting than any oils or Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use,
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.

Liberal Inducements to Dealers.

And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.

Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price Mist and Sample Color Card, Address,

GORDON'S FOOD

FOR
Horses, Cattle and Poultry.

Used in Europe for 12 Years.

Horses fed on this system are always in a good and healthy condition. Cows give as much milk as when fed on the best Spring grass.

[illegible] Broad St., NEWARK, N. J., March 16, 1876.—Mr. H. E. Squier—Dear Sir: In reply to your inquiry I have been using your Gordon's Food for some time and am satisfied with the results. I had a horse whose glabs were much swollen, and after using this food for a few weeks he became quite well, which I attribute entirely to said Food. I shall continue to use it as a profitable food to keep my horses in good condition. It produces perfect digestion and purifies the blood. Yours truly,

W. A. [illegible]

SHERIFF'S SALE.—In Chancery of New Jersey—Between The New York Life Insurance Company, complainant, and Paul Grignard, and wife, and als., defendants. Fi. fa. for sale of mortgaged premises.

By virtue of the above-stated writ of fieri facias to me directed, I shall expose for sale at public vendue, at the Court House, in the city of Elizabeth, N. J., on Wednesday, the 12th day of July, A. D. 1876, at two o'clock p. m. of said day, all those two certain tracts of land and premises, situate lying and being in the township of Westfield, county of Union and State of New Jersey, and described as follows, viz.:

Beginning at a stake or post on the easterly side of the main road, leading past Orren Pierson's house to Cranford, said post being a corner where Jersey avenue lately laid out for a street by Edward J. Annin (former owner of said land) intersects said main road; thence along the southerly side of said Jersey avenue north thirty-five degrees and thirty minutes east two hundred and eighty-four feet to a stake in the line of said avenue; thence south forty-five degrees and thirty minutes east two hundred and thirty-four feet to a stake in the line of the proposed North avenue; thence south twenty-four degrees and forty-five minutes west one hundred and twelve feet to a stake in the line of the aforesaid main road; thence binding on said main road north sixty-eight degrees and fifteen minutes west ninety-one feet to a stake in the line of said main road; thence south eighty-two degrees and forty-five minutes west seventy-five feet to a stake; thence still along said main road north eighty-two degrees west sixty-eight feet to the place of beginning—containing eighty-three hundredths of an acre of land, more or less.

The Second Tract—Beginning at a post standing in the easterly side of the old road leading from Westfield to Elizabeth; said post being also the westerly corner of other lands of said Grignard; thence binding on her other lands north forty-four degrees east four chains and forty-three links to a stake in an angle of other lands of said Annin; thence binding on other lands of said Annin south-easterly forty feet to a stake; thence still binding on other lands of said Annin and others, south forty-four degrees west four chains and seventy-three links to a post by the side of the aforementioned road; thence binding on said road southeasterly forty-two feet to the place of beginning.

Being the same premises conveyed by two deeds—the first tract from Caroline A. Leveridge to Sidonie Grignard, dated October 15, 1866, and recorded in liber 41, on page 31, &c. The Second by deed from Edward J. Annin and wife, to Sidonie Grignard, dated November 19, 1870, recorded in liber 31, pages 308 and 309 of deeds for Union county.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.—To Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., Anna P. Mellick his wife, and Stephen M. Blake.

By virtue of an order of the court of chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof in a cause therein pending, wherein Cornelius W. L. Martine is complainant, and Andrew D. Mellick, Jr. and others are defendants, you are required to appear and plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant, on or before the fifteenth day of July next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage made by said Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., to Anna Maria Martine, dated January 10th, 1873, on lands in the township of Plainfield, in Union county and State of New Jersey, and by said Anna Maria Martine assigned to the complainant. And you Andrew D. Mellick, Jr. are made defendant because you are the owner of the lands in said bill mentioned, and because the bill prays a decree against you for any deficiency there may be of the proceeds of said lands to pay the mortgage debt, interest and costs. And you, Anna P. Mellick are made defendant because you are the wife of said Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., and thereby may claim an inchoate right of dower in said lands.—And you, Stephen M. Blake, are made defendant, because you hold a mortgage on said lands in said bill described.

POETRY.

SPANISH PROVERBS.

Virtue ne'er dwells within that heart
Where shame has ceased to hold a part.

One ounce of mirth devoid of folly
Is worth a ton of melancholy.

The change of weather and the wind
[illegible] for fools doth always find.

When'er a good man comes to thee
Examine not his pedigree.

If thou a shilling's worth would'st know,
To borrow it thou need'st but go.

To reason lend a willing ear,
Or she ere long will make thee hear.

There is no evil in the end
To good, perchance, that may not tend.

The night make night, the day make day,
And life will gaily pass away.

The man who doth a widow wed
Must hear the living praise the dead.

My birthday first did hear me cry,
And every day doth show me why.

The husband sometimes must not see,
And blind the wife should often be.

If you a gentleman would know,
'Tis he whose deeds proclaim him so.

If thou from quarrels keepest free,
Then never can'st a witness be.

What fathers miserably acquire,
Their sons will throw into the fire.

With very many war pursue,
To council go with very few.

A word's a thing that flies away,
But writing may be made to stay.

Who his is when fortune shines,
When she departs the first repines.

If youth had wisdom, age had power,
Naught would be wanting for an hour.

He who still works easy, if he please,
Be always thinking of his ease.

Who seeks revenge for every wrong,
May live in honor, but not long.

You ne'er should say and ne'er should do
The word and deed wrath prompt you to.

He who once proves himself a knave
Doth seldom change this side the grave.

To others pardon e'er bestow,
But to thyself no mercy show.

Three may keep counsel, it is true,
But then you should get rid of two.

Those who the taste of honor know,
Ere find its spirit on them grow.

Folly and anger are the same,
The difference is but in name.

'Tis by his deeds, and not his gown,
A pious man may best be known.

ALL THINGS LOVE HER.

BY RICHARD WATSON GILDER.

O sweet wild roses that bud and blow
Along the way that my Love may go;
O moss-green rocks that touch her dress,
And grass that her dear face may press.

O maple tree whose brooding shade
For her a summer tent has made;
O golden-rod and brave sun-flower
That flame before my maiden's bower;

O butterfly on whose light wings
The golden summer sunshine clings;
O birds that flit o'er wheat and wall
And from cool hollows pipe and call;

O falling waters whose distant roar
Sounds like the waves upon the shore;
O winds that down the valley sweep,
And lightnings from the clouds that leap;

O skies that bend above the hills,
O gentle rains and babbling rills;
O moon and stars that beam and turn—
Keep safe my love till I return!

SAVED!

A WOMAN'S STORY.

"Miss Violet, will you give this letter to Mrs. Maltby?"

I had my hands full of drawing materials; but I received the letter, and continued on my way to Mrs. Maltby's dressing-room.

The drawings were little studies I had made while down at the seaside, where I had spent my vacation; made for Mrs. Maltby—to whom I had been a companion for a year—and Mrs. Maltby had been interested in them, saying, "Touch them up a bit, Violet and I will get a portfolio for them, and keep them."

I usually sat with her, in her dressing-room, through the morning. And thither I now repaired to touch up the drawings, while she sat with her slippered feet on the fender, embroidering with purple and crimson wools.

I gave her the letter, and went to a low seat in the deep bay-window. I sharpened a pencil, and then happened to glance toward my companion. Her face was ashy white. Her profile was turned toward me. In its regularity and pallor it looked like a face cut in stone. But I had never seen it look so sharp and deathly. The letter was clenched in her hand. I had brought her bad news.

I was shocked, but silent. I tried to remember what I knew of her family relations. She was a handsome black-haired woman of fifty, who had been early widowed, and returned to her father's house. Her parents were dead. Her mother had died in her infancy, and she had been the mistress of Redburn Hall every since. It was not long, however, since her father's decease. She had never had a child. She had no brothers or sisters whom I had ever heard of. I could not surmise what had happened. I saw her burn the letter; and then she rose and left the room.

Afterwards I guessed whom that communication was from.

A week passed. They were quiet and comfortable but rather monotonous weeks at Redburn. But, though young, I was less restless than most girls. I was not unhappy with Mrs. Maltby, only sometimes I wished for a little change.

It came—a most startling episode.

We had company to dine—Mrs. Maltby's lawyer and personal friend, from town. I was dressing her hair, as I sometimes did, for she liked my arrangements—pronouncing them artistic. Suddenly, without knocking or warning, the door was flung open, and a young man walked in.

I felt Mrs. Maltby start under my hands. I myself was frightened—the intruder looked so wild and reckless. He was very handsome; but he seemed to me to have been traveling long, or to have come out of some revel. His linen was soiled, his long, clustering hair unbrushed, and his eyes bloodshot. Yet his appearance was singularly attractive. I had never before seen so high-bred and graceful a man.

Mrs. Maltby did not speak to him. He seated himself before and not far from her, however.

"Go on, Violet," she said.

"Certainly; let the young lady proceed with her task," he said, quickly. "What I have to say need not interfere with her employment. I understand that she is your companion and confidant, though I have not had the pleasure of meeting her before."

The last sentence appeared to have been quite unconsciously spoken, for he had fixed his eyes fiercely upon Mrs. Maltby's face, and seemed to see only her. I went on plaiting up the braids of her hair, as I had been bid, but my hands trembled. I could not see her face, but I think she met that look steadily.

"You refused me," he said, in a far different tone from that in which he had at first spoken, low and concentrated.

"Certainly," she answered.

"Do you want my blood upon your head?" he continued.

"I wanted my hands clear of you long ago," she answered, composedly.

"Long ago," he repeated; and a wave of emotion that was inexplicable to me went over his face.

Then he was silent. I don't know why, but from that moment I pitied him. He got up, and commenced walking the floor.

"I tell you, Winifred, I must have this money," he said. "I must have it, and to-night, to-night," he repeated.

Mrs. Maltby was silent. I caught a glimpse of her face. Flint was not harder.

"Let me have it, Winifred," he said, pausing before her; "and I promise you it shall be the last time."

She made no reply.

"The last time. I mean it, Winifred."

His voice faltered. She did not speak.

"Will you?"

"No," she replied, with no emotion whatever.

His face had been working with some strong, deep feeling. But the monosyllable seemed to strike him like a blow. He stood looking at her, his face still and desperate.

"I did not think God could make such a woman as you are," he said, at last.

I felt her shrink beneath the actual horror with which he seemed to regard her. But she spoke with unaltered composure.

"I told you more than a year ago that I should pay no more debts of yours contracted in gambling, or in any other way," she said. "I meant it; you know that I meant it. I have given you fair warning. I shall not change."

He did not speak; his head was drooped upon his breast; he was deathly pale.

"I have done my duty by you, Guy—you know that I have," she added.

"Yes, you have been just, but you have never been merciful," he replied. "O, God!" He flung up his arms with a bitter cry that wrung my heart.

I looked at her. No; she did not relent or go to him. He had flung himself into a chair, and, with his head dropped into his arms folded upon the back, was the most hopeless figure I had ever seen. She rose, for I had finished her hair, and took a seat nearer the fire. Her lips were gray, as if she were cold; but her face was still as inflexible as flint.

He gave a groan, and started up suddenly.

"I am going," he said. "I—" He met her eye, and asked, "Why do you not kill me? I was altogether in your hands once. You killed her, you will remember."

A slight flush stained her cheek.

"You would have made her happy, I suppose, if she had lived," she said, sarcastically. But the sting did not seem to reach him.

"If she had lived! O, Heaven, if she had lived! Winifred, may God deal by you as you have dealt by me."

"I am willing," she answered.

He remained but a moment longer.—Wrapping his cloak about him, he gave her one look of reproach, and left the room. I looked wistfully at her; she did not speak to me, and I too went away.

She was ill the next day, but on the following day she appeared much as usual.

Of all that I thought and felt I of course said nothing. The matter was no affair of mine. I understood that the two were brother and sister—that the young man was named Guy Sedley—that he was dissolute and in disgrace—that Mrs. Maltby had taken care of him in boyhood, but now ignored the relationship. I was in no way allowed to learn any more.

But on the second night I was awakened by a light shining into my chamber. It was something unusual, for the little clock on the mantel was chiming twelve. After a moment, I slipped out of bed, and glided toward the open door. The long, embroidered folds of my night-dress nearly tripped me up; but I made no noise with my bare feet upon the deep velvet of the carpet. I don't know whom I expected to see—certainly not Guy Sedley, kneeling before a sandal-wood chest, with papers strewn around him on the floor. A taper burning on the mantel showed his face perfectly cool as he went on searching for something. He must have come through my room to reach the apartment, for it had no opening but into my chamber. I was aware that the papers in the chest were valuable; that there was money placed there. I saw that he was robbing his sister.

I saw, too, a dirk-knife on the floor, close at his side.

I looked at him an instant—even then I remembered to pity him—then glided forward, snatched the knife, and leapt back to the door. I was mistress of the situation, for I had come from behind him and done all as in a flash; and as he rose to his feet, I stood with a calmness that showed that it was not my intention to immediately arouse the house.

With a presence of mind equal to my own, he put the roll of bank notes he had been searching for into the pocket of his waistcoat, and, with a glittering eye, regarded me speculatively. I was petite, and I had not screamed; I know now that he was not much afraid of me.

"You have been robbing your sister," I said; "but if you will put the money back I will let you go."

His intense attention of me changed to a look of wonder.

"You child, are you not afraid of me?" he asked.

"No," I answered, truthfully.

"But I watched you in your sleep, a moment ago, debating whether it were necessary to kill you or not."

"You must have been glad to find that it was not necessary," I said.

He looked more astonished than before; but I did not stop to think of that.

"Put the money back," I said.

"No!" he said, firmly. "I will murder you first."

"Do not do that," said I. "I am your friend. I was sorry for you that day."

He did not speak, but a troubled look disturbed the pale fixedness of his face.

"How much money have you there?" I asked.

"One hundred pounds."

"Very much," he replied, with a bitter smile.

"Please put it back," I said. "She has been just to you; I would like to be merciful. I will give you the money."

"You!"

"I have it—yes—here in my room. Let me show you."

I flung open the back door, next to my writing-desk, and came back to him.

"These I will give you freely," I said opening the roll of notes. "You said to her that it should be the last time, and I hope—"

He had taken the notes into his hand, looking at them in a kind of unbelieving way.

"You may hope that you have saved me," he said, in a low voice.

We were silent for a moment.

"You know now that I was very sorry for you?" I said, with tears in my eyes.

"Yes," he said, gravely; "and I love you for it."

He put Mrs. Maltby's money back, and rearranged the chest. I began to listen, nervously, for noises about the house; but all was very still. He locked the chest and gave me the key.

"You know where it is kept?"

"Yes; in a drawer in her dressing-room." I wondered how he had obtained it. "Hasten and get away!"

"There is no danger; I made my way hither carefully. Pure, brave little girl, how fearless you are for yourself!"

He looked at me earnestly, as if he wished to carry away a clear memory of my features; then he wrapped his cloak about him, flung up the sash, and leapt soundlessly out into the darkness. I extinguished the taper, and crept back to bed. I did not hear a sound about the house until daybreak.

When I arose I saw the dirk-knife glistening in the sunshine near my writing desk where I had lain it. Then I shuddered.

A year later I was the mistress of Redburn; the beautiful house, the spacious grounds were all mine. Mrs. Maltby had died and bequeathed them to me.

On her dying bed she said, "Violet you are my heiress. There is only one living being who has my blood in his veins; him I disown." She paused, and then went on: "You have seen my brother. I loved him; I was ambitious for him, but his natural bent was evil. We had a cousin Flora, a child, who was brought up with him. They were engaged to be married. But I forbade it. I revealed to her his dissipation. I told her of his debts and deeds of daring. She loved him, she trusted him,—but she was delicate, and died. He says I killed her."

She grew pale, even past her dying pallor. She went on: "When I saw him last the officers of justice were after him; he was a defaulter. He had stolen money to pay his gambling debts. He is probably lying in jail now; but I will have none of him. I was just to him, and will never forgive him."

So she died, hard as a flint to the last. And I was mistress of Redburn.

I was young. I was fond of gaiety. I had now the means at my disposal. Every summer my house was filled with guests. In the winter I was in London or abroad. And yet I lived only on the interest of the money bestowed upon me.

Three years passed away. I had never heard a word of Guy Sedley, when, one day, the Bromleys, of London, who were coming to visit me, asked leave to bring a friend. I extended the solicited invitation, and Guy Sedley came. It was a shock; but he gave no token of the past. Reclaimed from his errors, he was so refined and manly that he was the most distinguished of my guests.

I loved him,—but I thought, "He must hate me, the usurper of his rights. He is poor because I have his patrimony. I have no right to Redburn, and I will not keep it. I will give it back to him."

An opportunity came. He was sitting on the terrace one bright evening. I went and took a seat near him.

"How lovely this view is!" he exclaimed, pointing toward the distant hills.

"Yes, and you shall wish for your right no longer, Mr. Sedley. Redburn is yours. I have no claim to it." He did not speak, and I went on: "Your sister was just. And she would have made you the heir if she had lived to see you what you are to-day."

"But it was your mercy, not her justice, Miss Sedley, that saved me. Violet, I love you, and will take Redburn with your hand, not else."

I put my hand in his, trusting him, loving him utterly, and proud, very proud to make him master of Redburn. Nor have I ever regretted it.

THE KING AND THE STUDENT.

Many odd freaks and adventures are told of that eccentric, petty sovereign, Louis of Bavaria. The following would show that he cannot be a very ill-natured man, at least.

Here is an anecdote relating to the King's sojourn at his royal Chateau de Berg:

Under penalty of fine and arrest it is forbidden to any one to enter the paths reserved for the King. One day his Majesty met, face to face, a stout young fellow, who was promenading there, very unceremoniously. The King stopped him, and asked him who he was.

"I am from Switzerland," he answered, and I am a student at the Munich University."

"Ah, you are a Swiss," said the King, with a kindly air. "You ought to know Schiller's William Tell by heart."

"I could recite to you whole acts of it!"

"Admirable! I am charmed to have met you. Come to the castle with me, and we will play 'William Tell.'"

"But, sir, the castle belongs to the King."

"No matter. I am his most intimate friend. Come, you will see what we shall be permitted to enter."

"Let us try, then, sir, since you desire to do so."

They set out together.

"Do you like Munich?"

"No; it is a stupid city; and the best proof of that is the King is never there."

"And what do they say of the King?"

"O, they say he is a right good fellow at heart!" Louis II. smiled.

"Have you ever seen him?"

"Never! I am a republican, sir; but I am told that he is very handsome, and that the women are very wild about him."

"Would you like to dine with him?"

"You are making game of me, are you not?"

"Not at all—since I invite you myself."

"Since—then, sir,—O, pardon,—perhaps you are the King?"

"You are right, and you are my prisoner."

They had reached the chateau, and the sentinel presented arms.

After dinner the King seated himself at his piano, and played overture to "William Tell;" he then caused the student to declaim the whole of Schiller's drama.

The next day they began again. The King gave the replies on that occasion. At the end of the third day he sent his guest in one of the royal carriages back to Munich, and forwarded to him, shortly after, a gold watch, with the scene of the Grutli engraved upon its case.

DRIED APPLES.

No one noticed her particularly until she punched the grocer in the back with her umbrella, and inquired:

"Didn't you hear me asking for dried apples? And if you didn't, do you hear me now?"

"I do, madam. I have some very choice dried apples at a shilling a pound."

"A shilling!" she screamed; "why, I've bought them for seven cents!"

"Can't be such apples as these, madam. These cost me eleven cents."

"Look here," she continued, lowering her voice, and laying her umbrella on his shoulder, "I know the law as well as you do, and I'll either protect my rights, or put you where you can't try to swindle any more innocent ladies."

"Law! What law, madam?"

"The dried apple law, sir. A man told me at the door the price was fixed by law at four cents a pound."

"Bosh, madam! There is no law about dried apples, any more than there is a law about horse-radish."

"Be careful, sir, be careful!" she whispered, lifting the umbrella over his head. "I'll take two pounds at four cents per pound."

"Humph!" he growled, as he began to move a barrel of potatoes.

"Does that allude to me?" she shouted, bringing the umbrella down on his back.

He ran out to call a policeman, and she upset a lot of pails, dodged out of the back way, and, climbing over a back fence, entered a harness shop a few doors below.

"You don't keep dried apples here, I s'pose?" she remarked to the proprietor.

They never had kept any, he replied, and he didn't know as they ever would. He said he didn't believe harness-making and dried apples were suited to each other.

"Are dried apples up?" she asked, reaching over for a piece of wax to chew on.

He had heard they were; in fact, he knew so. A few years ago his family could have dried apples twice a day all the year round; now the children cried for dried apple pie, and it made his mouth water to think of one.

He was an obliging man, and he soon satisfied her that there was no law having a direct bearing on dried apples. The high price, he thought, was caused by a scarcity, and the scarcity, he believed, was owing to a lack of fruit.

"Seems reasonable 'nuff," mused the woman, and she started for the grocery. Boldly entering, she walked up to the proprietor, held out her hand, and said:

"Forgimme. If you had explained that the dried apples was owing to the scarcity of a lack of high prices, why, I'd have seen through it in a minute, and taken all you had. I won't take any this morning, but if you have a bunch of onions for two cents, here's your cash, and I wouldn't strike you on the back again for a hull bottle of catsup."

HIS ECONOMY.

Washington Dalrymple was a young man of twenty-five, with a long sun-burned neck and high cheek bones. He was saving money for the Fourth of July, and to be as economical as possible he ate two dishes of ice-cream, drank a glass of soda water, devoured some cakes, and then told the good old man who keeps the shop that he'd call around on the 6th of July.

There was a row, and the police danced the economical young man down to the ice-chest.

"Young man, did you ever hear that Napoleon the First attempted to dead-beat an ice cream shop?" asked his Honor.

"No, sir, I didn't," was the prompt reply. "I have never heard much about him, any way."

"Did Goethe ever pull an old man's hair for trying to collect an honest debt of forty-five cents?"

"I never asked him, sir."

"Do you mean to keep on as you have begun? Do you intend to bilk your way through life and then dead-beat the undertaker?"

"They mustn't any body snatch off my necktie," was the defiant reply.

"I fear," said the court, after another look at that long neck, "I fear that you are a bad man. Seems to me you were on trial in the Police Court once for pounding your father."

"No, sir, you are mistaken, sir. They had me up for striking my mother."

"Ah! that is a difference, of course. And weren't you up there for striking some man—a baker, I believe?"

"I was up there for licking fourteen bakers in a crowd."

"Yes, I remember now. I don't think you will head the coming Fourth of July procession, Mr. Dalrymple."

"I didn't mean to, sir."

"I don't think you will even see it. About the time the bird of liberty is screaming her loudest and flapping her best you will be sitting in the shade of a bunch of catnip at the House of Correction, drinking penstock water and wishing you were an antelope."

The sentence was made for sixty days, and when the prisoner returned to the corridor he was so mad that he kicked the coal-stove and bent his big toe around at right angles.

A LONESOME DARKEY.

There was a slight rumpus near the Savannah market, early the other morning, that escaped the vigilance of the officer on duty. An old negro man, evidently from the country, was sitting in his wagon apparently in deep thought. His hair was plentifully sprinkled with gray, and he was carefully polishing the glasses of a pair of venerable-looking spectacles. Something in his appearance attracted the attention of two mulatto boys, who, with cigars in their mouths, were sauntering leisurely by.

"Dere's old man Methuselah," remarked one, while the other began to sing, "Der was an old nigger, an' his name was Methuselah—his name was Methuselah. When he got old he went to—"

But before the saddle-colored warbler could finish his ditty, the object of his serenade had leaped from the wagon and seized him. The next moment the tuneful youth was wriggling on the ground, while the old man was thumping him with a No. 11 brogan, without regard to the musical pauses, and with such vigor as to leave the impression on those within hearing that an army *of spring carpet-beaters had suddenly be*gun operations.

"Methuselum ain't had no sich marrer in his leg and is, is he?" said the old man, as he gave the youth a final jar that sent him rolling out of reach. Scrambling to his feet, the bruised boy, without answering the interrogatory, made up the street at a pace that soon carried him out of sight.

"I'm a lonesome nigger, I am," remarked the veteran, as he picked up his hat, which had fallen off his head during the thumping process. "I'm lonesome by nature, and when I gets mad my lonesomeness is do wus kinder d'esse. Dey ain't no town niggers aroun' here," he continued, giving a suggestive pull at the lappels of his coat, and casting glances at those whose attention had been attracted by the incident just related, "dey ain't no town niggers aroun' here dat wants to keep me from bein' lonesome, is dey? Ef dey is, jes let him walk right out here in the sand, shuck hisself, an' I'll see ef I can't keep him com'ny while my wind lasts."

As there was no response to this somewhat sarcastic challenge, the old negro mounted the wagon again, and was soon engaged in enjoying his propensities for "lonesomeness."

LEAF PHOTOGRAPHS.

A very pretty amusement, especially for those studying botany, is the taking of leaf photographs.

The simple process is this:

At any druggist's get a dime's worth of bichromate of potash. Put this in a bottle (3 oz.) of soft water. When the solution becomes saturated—that is the water has dissolved as much as it will—pour off some of the clear liquid into a shallow dish; on this float a piece of ordinary writing paper, till it is thoroughly moistened.

Let it become nearly dry, in the dark. It should be of a bright yellow. On this put the leaf; under it a soft piece of black cloth and several sheets of newspaper. Put these between two glasses, (all the pieces should be of the same size) and with spring clothes-pins fasten them together.

Expose to a bright sun, placing the leaf so that the rays will fall upon it as nearly perpendicular as possible. In a few moments it will begin to turn brown, but it requires from half an hour to several hours to produce a perfect print.

When it becomes dark enough, take it down the frame and put in clear water, which must be changed every few minutes till the yellow part becomes perfectly white. Sometimes the veinings of the leaves will be quite distinct. By following these directions it is scarcely possible to fail, and a little practice will make perfect.

IT WAS "POROUS."

While a clerk in a hardware store was yesterday morning setting things to rights for the business of the day, a citizen with gray locks and self-satisfied look dropped in, and kindly asked:

"Have you any four-quart porous kettles?"

"Porous kettles?" mused the clerk. I never heard of them."

"What do you call those?" demanded the citizen, as he stood around and held up a kettle.

"That's a porcelain kettle, sir," was the reply; "that's what you want, is it?"

"That's what I want, if it is a porous kettle," said the citizen.

"We call 'em porcelain," replied the clerk.

"What right have you to call them so?—Why don't you call a dog a cat?"

"But how can iron be porous?" humbly inquired the clerk.

"How can a young man be a fool!" shouted the citizen. "It has come to a pretty pass when a boy of your age attempts to teach a man of my years any thing!—Don't you suppose I know the difference between porcelain and porous?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, then, here's your seventy-five cents for this porous kettle, and I'd like to have it sent around to the house right away."

The clerk had to submit. He says that a rich man can do anything, while a poor clerk is kept down.

Democratic Nominations.

For President,
SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
OF NEW YORK.

For Vice President,
THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
OF INDIANA.

THE CANDIDATES.

It must be admitted, that both the Democratic and Republican parties, in making Presidential nominations for the present year, have honored their partisan names by selecting gentlemen of ability and integrity. And not only so as regards the candidates for President, the same judicious care having been bestowed upon those for Vice President, thereby doing away with a custom heretofore pursued, of frequently making the nominee for the second office out of a very inferior material.

We advocate the election of Tilden and Hendricks, because they are in every particular men qualified to discharge with efficiency, honesty and dignity, the responsible duties of President and Vice President.

We advocate them, because they represent those grand Democratic principles of government—

A Constitutional currency;

A justly derived revenue;

An economic expenditure of public money;

A free opportunity for every industrial pursuit;

An abolishment of all class legislation;

A rigid enforcement of law.

Under which our country, when steered by Democratic statesmen, attained such a high degree of national and individual prosperity, and for the want of which, she is now suffering from centre to circumference.

Vote for
TILDEN AND HENDRICKS.

OHIO DEMOCRATS.

The Democratic ratification meeting at Cincinnati, July 8th, was largely attended, and the speakers were frequently applauded. Speeches were made by Judge Hoadley, George H Pendleton, F. Hassaurek and others.—Senator Thurman writing from Washington in answer to an invitation to be present said that the public business would not admit of his leaving there at the present time. He writes "If a man is a Democrat at heart now is the time for him to show it; if he is a true and earnest friend of reform, now is the time for him to prove it; if he prefers Constitutional Government to lawless party rule, a Union of justice and fraternity to a Union of force and violence, now is the time for him to show his faith by his works. It is no time to indulge in vain repining; it is no time to cry over spilt milk; it is no time to make some special but subordinate theory paramount to the success of a great cause. What can any man who has the least claim to be called a Democrat hope to gain by prolonging Radical rule; but he does work to that end if he opposes the St. Louis nominations, or by coldness and indifference contributes to their defeat. Gentlemen, it is current talk among our adversaries that Ohio is irrevocably lost to the Democracy. I do not believe it. I say in sincerity and earnestness to every Democrat and friend of reform, put your shoulder to the wheel and do not despair."

THE RIGHT MEN IN THE WRONG PLACE.

Chairman Banning, of the Military Committee, at Washington, received July 10th from the Secretary of War the information asked for by Banning's resolution of Saturday relative to the number and disposition of troops.—From the communication it appears there were on the muster roll before the latest Indian massacre, 26,979 regular troops, all told. These are divided into ten cavalry, five artillery and twenty five infantry regiments, of about five hundred men each, with about one commissioned officer to every six men. The infantry number 15,000 men, the artillery 3,500, and the cavalry 7,800, of whom 4,000 are not mounted.—Terry had with him 1,123 men, Crook 1,780, and the rest are distributed as follows: In the territories, 7,940 men; in Texas, 3,718; in other Southern States, 3,334; at recruiting stations, West Point, &c., 4,216; at forts and Northern posts, 4,868. A glance at the distribution shows how little need there is of any increase of the army. The testimony of the Southern men in Congress is unanimous that the presence of troops in the South is useless, and worse than useless. In Louisiana alone there are two regiments of colored troops, now used to stir up sectional strife, which would be in much better business fighting the Indians.—World.

We notice in some Republican journals a host of disreputable stories against the Democratic candidate for President. Go ahead with that kind of political warfare if you wish, gentlemen, it will make many votes for Samuel J. Tilden. The people are disgusted with partisan lying and mud throwing. They know Governor Tilden to be a man of stern integrity and thorough executive ability who, as President, will prove a defender of popular rights, and a terror to official thieves of every grade. Falsehoods only damage their authors.

Why was not President Grant at the grand celebration of the Centennial Fourth in Philadelphia? Upon an occasion of such national importance, honored by the presence of the Emperor of Brazil and many foreign Ambassadors, the absence of the Chief Magistrate of the United States was certainly strange.

The First Brigade of New Jersey soldiers which went into camp near Trenton last week, were ordered home and broke camp on Sunday, the heat being so intense that the men could not stand it. The command numbered 1,700 men, and the site selected by the Commanding General, Plume, was the worst that could have been picked out, being on an open, sandy tract.—Other and more favorable localities near groves and the Delaware river were refused by the General, although tendered free. On Saturday, a parade was attempted, when one hundred and seventy men were prostrated by the heat. Gov. Bedle was appealed to, who promptly ordered the brigade home and countermanded the order for the encampment of the Second Brigade on the same grounds on Tuesday. Co. E, of our city, belongs to the latter brigade and anticipated going into camp on Tuesday. Much indignation is expressed toward Gen. Plume for selecting the site of the encampment, also the Quartermaster-General and other officers for failing to provide proper supplies and make necessary arrangements for the troops. No deaths have as yet occurred among the sun-stricken soldiers although it will be some time before many of them recover.

More trouble among negroes and whites has occurred at Augusta, Ga.—The trouble arose from legal proceedings against a negro company for obstructing the roads on the Fourth and detaining passengers. At the opening trial, on Thursday, the colored commander was arrested for contempt by the colored magistrate, who was presiding. On Saturday the trial was renewed and over a hundred armed whites rode in to support the Court. The colored people stood to their arms and the firing began. Now look out for a howl from the Radical press. The whole blame will be laid to Tilden and Hendricks.

A band of masked robbers stopped an express train on the Missouri Pacific Railroad Friday night last, and keeping the officers and passengers of the train in subjection by pointing revolvers at their heads, broke open the safes in the express car and stole some sixteen thousand dollars. They then rode off in a body. A large number of citizens immediately organized and started in pursuit of the robbers, and from late accounts had surrounded them and an early capture of the miscreants was expected.

In another column will be found Gov. Hayes letter of acceptance as the Republican candidate for the Presidency. It is a document carefully constructed by the party managers and makes many promises. It is not a straight-forward, manly letter, outspoken in its utterances, but the writer seeks to smooth and cover over the mis-doings of the administration party. Let the reader peruse the document and judge its merits by its utterances.

The German Democratic Central Committee of New York say. "We accept the nomination of Samuel J. Tilden for the office of President as a pledge of the earnest desire of the Democratic party to fulfill the most pressing demands for the relief of a suffering country, namely: thorough-going legislative and administrative reform, relentless prosecution of corruption, and wise economy in the public household."

What a glorious sight that was in Philadelphia on the Fourth, a citizen of old Virginia, and a grandson of one of the signers, reading the Declaration of Independence from the original parchment. How vividly it must have brought to the imagination of each hearer that noble band of patriots, who one hundred years before, there laid the corner stone of the great American Republic.

Gov. Hayes has sent a letter to Rev. J. D. Bagwell, of Plainfield, in which he says his "whole public life has been identified with measures for advancing and securing the rights of the colored people." Isn't it about time that he devoted some little thought to the welfare of the poor whites, who are not the pampered "wards of the nation?" Elizabeth Herald.

WHAT THE PEOPLE ARE ASKED TO BE GRATEFUL FOR AND TO COMMEND

The Republican Platform, on which Hayes and Wheeler stand, declares that the Administration merits commendation, and President Grant deserves hearty gratitude. For what?

For the Crooked Whiskey frauds.

For the unnumbered railroad jobs and swindles.

For the Leet and Stocking-Murphy Custom House Frauds.

For the Post Office straw bid frauds.

For the Navy contract frauds.

For the Freedmen's Saving Bank swindle.

For the Secret Service frauds—paying John I. Davenport thousands of dollars from the people's treasury to elect the Republican ticket.

For the Schenck Emma Mine frauds and disgrace.

For the Belknap soldier gravestone frauds.

For the Belknap post-trader frauds.

For the District Ring "Boss" Shepherd frauds.

For the Indian Ring frauds.

For the Safe Burglary villiany and Babcock and Harrington.

For the Credit Mobilier infamy.

For the St. Domingo job.

For "Landaulet" Williams and his infamy.

For Casey, Orvil Grant and Company.

For the fraud in the sale of arms to France.

For corruption in every part of the Federal Government.

For increasing the salaries of the President and other public officers.

For increasing the burdens of the tax-payer, and blocking every effort at Retrenchment and Reform.

If the people agree with the declaration of the Republican party in Convention that these things are to be commended, can they expect anything else than a continuation of them.

GOV. TILDEN OFFICIALLY INFORMED OF HIS NOMINATION.

Monday eve'g, the committee appointed by the St. Louis Convention to inform Gov. Tilden of his nomination for President of the United States, assembled at the Governor's private residence in New York city, and through Gen. McClernand, the Chairman, tendered him a formal address containing the announcement. Personal addresses were also made by Gen. McClernand, and Hon. B. W. Hanna, of Ind. In response, Gov. Tilden said: "I shall at my earliest convenience prepare and transmit to you a formal acceptance of the nomination which you now tender to me in behalf of the Democratic National Convention, and I do not desire on this occasion to anticipate any topic which might be appropriate to that communication." After briefly reviewing the situation, and the possible result of the election, he concluded: "But let us believe, as I do believe, that we now see the dawn of a better day for our country, and that difficult as is the work to which the Democratic party, with many of the allies and former members of other parties, has addressed itself, the republic is yet to be renovated, to live in all the future and to be transmitted to future generations as Jefferson contributed to form it in his day, and in which it has been ever since, until a recent period, a blessing to the whole people."

Another Cabinet head has dropped into the basket. A telegram from Washington announces that a few days ago when Postmaster General Jewell was asked as to the truth of the report that he intended to resign, he laughingly said that, so far from the report being true, he expected to remain in his place until the end of the present administration. Yesterday afternoon, however, after calling at the executive mansion to transact some business with the President, the latter, much to the surprise of the post-master general, informed him that his resignation would be accepted. Therefore Mr. Jewell immediately wrote a letter accordingly. Mr. Marshall, the First Assistant Postmaster general, who was in the country, was telegraphed last night to return to the city immediately, and accordingly arrived here this morning, when Mr. Jewell, much to his astonishment, informed him what had taken place. Mr. Marshall is now acting as Postmaster-General.

The colored voters of Plainfield and some that are not voters, have formed a political club styled the "Centennial Campaign Equal Rights Club." Of course they advocate the election of Hayes & Wheeler, and we suppose that insures their election. The colored troops must be kept in the ranks, you know, and therefore it is necessary to clothe them in a gorgeous uniform, give them lanterns and treat them to a street parade once in a while.

Mr. Blaine has formally accepted the U. S. Senatorship, made vacant by Mr. Morrell's appointment to the Treasury, and tendered to him by Gov. Connor. Of course, he will not be able to occupy the seat this session.

GOV. HAYES' LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

CINCINNATI, O., July 9.—The following is the letter of Gov. Hayes, accepting the nomination for the Presidency:

CINCINNATI, O., July 8, 1876.

Hon. Edward McPherson, Hon. Wm. A. Howard, Hon. Jos. H. Rainey and others, Committee of the National Republican Convention.

GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your official communication of June 17, by which I am informed of my nomination for the office of President of the United States by the Republican National Convention at Cincinnati, I accept the nomination with gratitude, hoping that under Providence I shall be able, if elected, to execute the duties of the high office as a trust for the benefit of all the people.

I do not deem it necessary to enter upon any extended examination of the declaration of principles made by the convention; the resolutions are in accord with my views, and I heartily concur in the principles they announce. In several of the resolutions, however, questions are considered which are of such importance that I deem it proper to briefly express my convictions in regards to them.

The sixth resolution adopted by the convention is of paramount interest.—More than forty years ago a system of making appointments to office grew up, based upon the maxim, "to the victors belong the spoils." The old rule, the true rule, that honesty, capacity and fidelity constitute the only real qualifications for office, and that there is no other claim, gave place to the idea that party services were to be chiefly considered. All parties, in practice, have adopted this system. It has been essentially modified since its first introduction; it has not, however, been improved.

At first the President, either directly or through the heads of departments, made all the appointments. But gradually the appointing power in many cases passed into the control of members of Congress. The offices in these cases have become not merely rewards for party services, but rewards for services to party leaders. This system destroys the independence of the separate departments of the Government. "It tends directly to extravagance and official incapacity;" it is a temptation to dishonesty; it hinders and impairs that careful supervision and strict accountability by which alone faithful and efficient public service can be secured; it obstructs the prompt removal and sure punishment of the unworthy; in every way it degrades the civil service and the character of the Government. It is felt, I am confident, by a large majority of the members of Congress to be an intolerable burden and an unwarrantable hindrance to the proper discharge of their legitimate duties. It ought to be abolished. The reform should be thorough, radical and complete. We should return to the principles and practice of the founders of the Government—supplying by legislation, when needed, that which was formerly the established custom. They neither expected nor desired from the public officers any partisan service. They meant that public officers should give their whole service to the Government and to the people. They meant that the officer should be secure in his tenure as long as his personal character remained untarnished and the performance of his duties satisfactory. If elected, I shall conduct the administration of the Government upon these principles, and all constitutional powers vested in the Executive will be employed to establish this reform. The declaration of principles by the Cincinnati Convention makes no announcement in favor of a single Presidential term. I do not assume to add to that declaration; but, believing that the restoration of the civil service to the system established by Washington and followed by the early Presidents can be best accomplished by an Executive who is under no temptation to use the patronage of his office to promote his own re-election, I desire to perform what I regard as a duty in stating now my inflexible purpose if elected not to be a candidate for election to a second term.

On the currency question I have frequently expressed my views in public, and I stand by my record on this subject. I regard all the laws of the United States relating to the payment of the public indebtedness, the legal-tender notes included, as constituting a pledge and moral obligation of the Government which must in good faith be kept. It is my conviction that the feeling of uncertainty inseparable from an irredeemable paper currency with its fluctuations of value is one of the great obstacles to a revival of confidence and business and to a return of prosperity. That uncertainty can be ended in but one way—the resumption of Specie Payments; but the longer the instability of our money system is permitted to continue, the greater will be the injury inflicted upon our economical interests and all classes of society. If elected I shall approve every appropriate measure to accomplish the desired end, and shall oppose any step backward. The resolution with respect to the public school system is one which should receive the hearty support of the American people. Agitation upon this subject is to be apprehended, until by constitutional amendment the schools are placed beyond all danger of sectarian control or interference. The Republican party is pledged to secure such an amendment. The resolution of the convention on the subject of the permanent pacification of the country, and the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all of their constitutional rights, is timely and of great importance. The condition of the Southern States attracts the attention and commands the sympathy of the people of the whole Union. In their progressive recovery from the effects of the war, their first necessity is an intelligent and honest administration of Government which will protect all classes of citizens in their political and private rights. What the South most needs is "peace," and peace depends upon the supremacy of the law. There can be no enduring peace if the constitutional rights of any portion of the people are habitually disregarded. A division of political parties resting merely upon sectional lines is always unfortunate, and may be disastrous. The welfare of the South, alike with that of every other part of this country, depends upon the attractions it can offer to labor and immigration and to capital. But laborers will not go and capital will not be ventured where the Constitution and the laws are set at defiance; and distraction, apprehension and alarm take the place of peace-loving and law-abiding social life. All parts of the Constitution are sacred, and must be sacredly observed—the parts that are new no less than the parts that are old. The moral and national prosperity of the Southern States can be most effectually advanced by a hearty and generous recognition of the rights of all, by all—a recognition without reserve or exception. With such a recognition fully accorded it will be practicable to promote, by the influence of all legitimate agencies of the General Government, the efforts of the people of those States to obtain for themselves the blessings of honest and capable local government. If elected I shall consider it not only my duty, but it will be my ardent desire to labor for the attainment of this end.

Let me assure my countrymen of the Southern States that if I shall be charged with the duty of organizing an administration, it will be one which will regard and cherish their truest interests—the interests of the white and of the colored people both and equally, and which will put forth its best efforts in behalf of a civil policy which will wipe out forever the distinction between North and South in our common country.

With a civil service organized upon a system which will secure purity, experience, efficiency and economy, a strict regard for the public welfare solely in appointments, and the speedy, thorough and unsparing prosecution and punishment of all public officers who betray official trusts; with a sound currency; with education unsectarian and free to all; with simplicity and frugality in public and private affairs, and with a fraternal spirit of harmony pervading the people of all sections and classes, we may reasonably hope that the second century of our existence as a nation will, by the blessing of God, be pre-eminent as an era of good feeling, and a period of progress, prosperity and happiness. Very respectfully, your fellow-citizen, (Signed) R. B. HAYES.

The American People.

No people in the world suffer as much with Dyspepsia as Americans. Although years of experience in medicine has failed to accomplish a certain and sure remedy for this disease and its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Heart-burn, Water-brash, Sick Headache, Costiveness palpitation of the Heart, Liver Complaint, coming up of the food, low spirits, general debility, etc., yet since the introduction of GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER we believe there is no case of Dyspepsia that cannot be immediately relieved. 30,000 dozen sold last year without one case of failure being reported. Go to your Druggist Wm. H. Voorhees and get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you. Regular size 75 cents.

My Friend

Are you aware of the fact that you are living in an age when Americans are celebrating the one hundredth Anniversary of their independence? Are you aware that one hundred years ago hardware men did not advertise "Mowing Machines?"—Are you aware that one hundred years ago there was no Central Railroad stock at 74 per cent? Are you aware that one hundred years ago the quickest way to send a telegram was to take it yourself? Are you aware that one hundred years ago the ladies did not wear bustles? Are you aware that one hundred years ago no such sign as "a schooner of lager for 3 cents" appeared in New York (we forget how it was with Jersey)? Are you aware that one hundred years ago you could not buy a pair of Shoes of

DID you ever notice that a pen always lands on the point when you drop it?

No mosquitoes in Plainfield. What a blessing in this weather.

THE green apple season approaches and our medical fraternity wink knowingly.

CHURCH slumberers are now annoyed by the savage onslaught of the mischievous fly.

THE thermometer has ranged from 90 to 102 deg. above in the shade since our last issue.

THE Board of Trade met in Laing's Parlors, last Monday evening. The institution is becoming a grand success.

To give a good expression to your face eat a few cucumbers just before going to have your picture taken.

DUNELLEN and New Market were each visited with a fine, refreshing shower on Monday afternoon last, but only a few drops for Plainfield.

WE saw a young gutter snipe lying flat in the muddy water which filled Cherry Street, near the City Hotel after the shower on Tuesday, trying to swim.

A YOUNG son of Daniel Randolph caught an immense snapping turtle, weighing 25 pounds, on a fish line in New Brooklyn pond Wednesday evening last.

THE country is flooded with counterfeit silver quarters. Plainfield has her share of them. They are easily told by their greasy feeling upon being handled.

OUR police court has been remarkably dull the past week on account of the scarcity of arrests, which bespeaks volumes for the morals of our beautiful city.

THE "Club House" on Park Avenue, or "Peck's Avon Park House," near by, are excellent places to drive to these sweltering days. Plenty of shade there.

WE noticed two crates of beautiful California Apricots on John Wilt's Stand yesterday, which upon sampling we found to be as delicious as they were beautiful.

DACE fishing has become quite popular among the disciples of Isaac Walton in Plainfield. Numbers of the finny tribe of this specie are now taken along Green and Stony Brooks.

OUR great and glorious Town Clock is again resting from its labors. We guess this centennial time piece had better be shot, for sure, now. She's played out. All are invited.

THE colored folks have organized a "little church around the corner" of Fourth and Pearce Streets, which was attended by a slim congregation last Sunday, owing, no doubt, to the extreme heat.

ON and after July 17th, the new up-town ferry of the Central Railroad Company, at the foot of Clarkson Street, N. Y., will be opened, and boats connect with all the principal trains on the road.

WE give fair warning to the parties who took a pair of planes from the wagon left standing in the lot adjoining our office on the morning of July Fourth, that if the same are not returned to this office within two days from this date that a constable's services will be employed by us. Fair warning.

THE ministers and congregations of our various churches adopted a wise plan on Sunday last, when it was resolved to hold no divine service in the churches during the evening of that day on account of the extreme heat. The M. E. Church, where Rev. Dr. Vincent repeated his Fourth of July oration, was the only church open that evening, and the crowd there to listen was immense.

ABOUT the cheekiest thing that we know of is the practice indulged in by certain parties who paste bills over others on our bill boards. These boards have cost us considerable money, and as we are paid to paste bills on them, we do not propose to have the same covered over by interlopers, as they will find to their sorrow one of these days. There is a stringent law regarding such cases. A word to the wise, &c.

AT a Regular Communication of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, Knights of Pythias, held on Thursday, July 3rd, the following officers were duly Installed for the ensuing term:

C. C.—S. C. Lilienstern.
V. C.—J. Cantorwitz.
Prelate—H. Walden.
K. of R. & S.—C. Mc Ginley.
M. at A.—G. R. Leland.
I. G.—J. Buckle.
P. C.—N. M. Sebring.

LAGER beer seems to be the prevailing beverage of the nation the present year, even some of our most aristocratic and fashionable families indulging in the use of lager in their houses. Heyder, the bottler of pure Milwaukie, St. Louis, Rochester and Newark beer, under Schorb's Clothing House, is kept busy night and day to fill orders. The beer is bottled in pint bottles with patent fastening, so that when a glass is poured out the bottle can be again closed air-tight, thus preserving the qualities of the beer.

IN the hurry of composing our report of the Fourth of July procession last week, we failed to describe the display made by Warnock, the baker, as fully as we should have done. Mr. W. was represented in the line by a baker's wagon, drawn by three horses, hitched tandem; at the heads of each walked a man dressed in appropriate costume. In the wagon was a real oven, from which was drawn forth freshly baked biscuit by workmen as the procession moved along. The biscuit were handed to young lads walking beside the vehicle, who distributed them to the crowd from plates. It was a fine feature of the parade.

THE Plainfield Athletic Club have accepted an invitation from the N. Y. Athletic Club to enter in their extra sports on the 29th of July inst., and several members will take part. The sports will consist of 100 yds. dash, 440 yds. (¼ mile) run, ½ mile run and two (2) mile walk, all handicap. Gold medals will be presented as first and second prizes and silver ones for third. The N. Y. Athletic Club are an old established association, having an enclosed ground at Mott Haven, N. Y., containing a pedestrian track of an eighth of a mile in extent and a grand judges' stand and other buildings. The game will take place on these grounds.

Sun Stroke.

On Monday last a man named Con. Cahill, a blacksmith in the employ of Jas. B. Martin, entered the [illegible] store of Eugene Laing, on Front Street, and commenced to act strangely, imagining that some one was pursuing him. Capt. Breen was summoned and a wagon being procured, the by this time, unconscious man was taken to his boarding house in Liberty Street, where he died in a short time. The physician in attendance, Dr. [illegible], stated that his death was caused by sun-stroke.

To Subscribers.

Those who did not receive THE CONSTITUTIONALIST last week must attribute the cause to the sickness of "Cookie" the "old reliable" carrier, who was unable to go the rounds with the papers. He is all right again this week, however, and you will be faithfully served as of yore.

Strangers in These Parts.

For the past two weeks several white storks have been seen feeding in ponds about New Brooklyn and Metuchen, and several have been shot. Mr. Lebeus Ayres, near Metuchen, shot three; Mr. John Doty, near New Brooklyn, shot two, and Mr. Isaac Laing, near the same place, shot one and wounded another so that he cannot fly. Mr. L. has tied the bird to the edge of a pond where the creature wades about and feeds upon the frogs and small fish in the waters. These birds are strangers to this part of the country.

Serious Accident.

Capt. Geo. Mehl, Abraham Bennett and Jacob Naylor, of this city, met with a serious accident at Elizabeth on Friday last. They were employed by the Central R. R. Co. in repairing a dwelling damaged by fire on the Fourth, and owned by the Company, when a scaffolding gave way and precipitated the workmen to the ground, a distance of some sixteen feet. Mr. Mehl's hip was broken and Mr. Bennett's leg was fractured near the hip, while Mr. Naylor escaped with a sprained ankle. The two first mentioned were removed to St. Michael's hospital at Newark, where they will receive the best of care and medical assistance, while Mr. Naylor was assisted to his home in Plainfield. The many friends of Capt. Mehl and his fellow-workmen will learn with regret of this accident.

Rain at Last.

On Tuesday afternoon last the prayers and wishes of the thousands who have suffered from the extreme heat and drouth in this section the past 3 weeks was answered by such a downfall of rain as we have not seen for many a day. Shower succeeded shower, the rain falling in torrents, flooding the streets and depressions under the railroad bridges to an unusual depth. Vivid lightning and crashing thunder accompanied the rain. The only serious damage from lightning that we have learned of occurring in this immediate vicinity was the burning of the barn and outbuildings of Simeon Lambert, situated between Plainfield and Rahway, which were struck by lightning. The loss is about $8,000, on which there is no insurance. Mr. Newton Randolph's house on Plainfield Avenue was struck by lightning and slightly damaged, and the dwelling of Mr. S. Marsh, on Ninth Street, corner of Third Place, was also struck by the electric fluid and a few bricks knocked from one of the chimneys.

A Scare.

Last Monday evening, as Mr. L. D. Jones was crossing the Jersey City ferry, his attention was attracted toward a stranger who claimed his protection from thieves, whom he said were following him to do him violence. Mr. Jones conversed with him for a while, when the stranger suddenly asked him if he knew of any good place in the country where he could stay all night, as he was afraid to stay in the city, at the same time remarking that he intended sailing for Europe on the Russia which was to sail the next day. Mr. Jones brought him to Plainfield and to the Park House, where he was given a room on the third floor. During the night the attention of the boarders was attracted to the actions of the stranger, who leaning from his window was shouting fire, murder, thieves, &c. An effort was made to enter his room but the door was found locked and no inducement would prevail upon him to open it. Finally the services of two policemen were procured and the door broken in. The officers then rushed in and seized the man who threatened to jump out of the window. He was taken to the station house where he received proper quarters for the night. The impression prevailed among the Park House people that he was suffering from delirium tremens, but Dr. Stillman, Jr., who was aroused about 1 o'clock to attend to the case, decided that the case was one of incipient insanity, caused by fatigue and heat. This opinion was confirmed the next morning when the man became more rational and gave a succinct account of the occurrence of the previous evening, but stated that through great anxiety and weariness he had become so nervous and excited that he had lost the power of control. Upon being searched a gold hunting case watch and chain attached, together with a bill of exchange for £42 on Brown Bros. of London, $27 in cash and a ticket on the Cunard steamer Russia which sailed yesterday for Liverpool, were found upon his person. His wife, who resides in Evansville, Indiana, was telegraphed to as follows: "Your husband is insane, what shall we do with him?" and Mr. Jones received the next morning advices to detain him until friends came for him. Proper quarters were obtained for him by Capt. Breen with the warden at Elizabeth, and probably, e'er now, he is in the custody of his friends.

Personals.

Prof. Gross, the worthy Principal of our Public School, has gone to Mt. Desert, Me., to enjoy the cool atmosphere of that picturesque locality.

Mr. F. E. Brockway, of 7th St., has been sojourning for a few days at Long Branch.

Mr. Shaw, our enterprising druggist, has returned from his visit to the Centennial.

The residence of J. P. Rogers, Esq., on Prospect Hill, has been leased for 6 months, to Mr. Frank Work, a prominent N. Y. banker.

Mr. Benj. Rogers has returned from Florida to spend the summer among his friends in Plainfield. If the thermometer is 98 deg. in the shade in Plainfield, what must it be in Florida?

We regret to hear of the serious accident happening to our Democratic friend, Capt. Mehl. We trust he may soon recover.

And now, with the thermometer ranging among the nineties, our young friend Dr. Mead has gone and committed matrimony. His courage is to be commended.

WE were in error last week in stating that M. Layfayette Angleman took the first prize for best English Composition at the Commencement Exercises. He received the prize for First Honor.

MR. LEWIS SMALLEY arrived home from a three months' pigeon hunt in Michigan, on Monday last, bringing with him 340 wild birds. He and his comrades have been very successful in their enterprise.

Abram S. See, President of the Quile Anti-Friction Metal Co., and wife, have gone to the West End Hotel, Long Branch, accompanied by their daughter, Mrs. R. H. Depew, and by her daughters Miss Marie V. and Miss Louise.

Howard Pope, of the firm of Pope Bros., is confined to his residence by an attack of Pneumonia.

Mr. A. L. Rowe has severed his business connection with S. M. Mumford in the real estate business. Mr. R. is a competent business man and proposes engaging in a new enterprise in Plainfield, which will do honor and credit to this place.

OUR worthy friend P. I. Ten Broeck has started an Intelligence Office in Cowan's building, Cherry Street, near Rubsahmen's cigar store. We wish him success and hope our citizens will bestow upon him a liberal patronage.

A lad of 17 years, named Miller, entered Kip's Hardware store at Passaic, on Saturday last to buy a pistol. While the clerk went out to get a [illegible] the [illegible] a cartridge in [illegible] [illegible] the pistol and pointed it [illegible] which it exploded, killing Miller instantly.

FIRE MATTERS.

The Board of Fire Commissioners will meet in the usual place next Thursday, July 20.

About half past six o'clock, Wednesday morning last, smoke was discovered issuing from the double dwelling house on Emily Street, North Plainfield, owned by Mr. John C. Hapfelder. An alarm was given, and the Department were promptly on hand, and soon had the fire under control, which was in the attic. The peculiar location of the fire necessitated, flooding the structure with water to quench the flames, the smoke being so dense that it was impossible for a person to remain in the upper part of the house. Warren, No. 3 hand engine got to work first and would have rendered the using of a steamer unnecessary had they had hose enough to reach the house at first. By borrowing hose of Gazelle steamer they had the first stream on, followed in a few moments by No. 2 steamer with a powerful stream.—The fire originated in rooms occupied by Wm. Friese and family from causes unknown. The loss on the building is about $50. Insured in the Ætna, of Hartford, for $1,000 and Washington, of Plainfield, for $500.

The utility and worth of a Hook and Ladder Company in our Department becomes more and more apparent at each fire occurring in our midst. The Zephyr H. & L. Co. No. 1 is a fine organization and efficiently officered.

In our report of the Fourth of July Celebration last week we forgot to mention the fact that the "lost fire bell" was again heard from. When the procession passed E. P. Thorn's saloon on Cherry Street, the old relic pealed forth in ringing notes its acknowledgment of the occasion. "Edd," its custodian, had the bell suspended over the doorway of his saloon, so that all who entered might feel of the relic and congratulate it upon its restoration to light, but not to take it away, because the "boys" want to keep it, you know.

In making repairs about the ringing apparatus of the Seventh Day Baptist Church bell, on Wednesday last, the workmen thoughtlessly commenced ringing the bell, which caused an alarm of fire to be given, and the Alarm bell being rung the entire Department turned out and had a fine run through the sweltering sun. There was murmurings not complimentary to the parties who caused the alarm among the firemen as they tugged the heavy apparatus home.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

As Mr. Adam Fritz, Sr., was driving a number of cattle toward Plainfield from Communipaw one day last week, an ugly steer charged upon and gave him a toss in the air, injuring him seriously. The brute, which was a vicious one, was slaughtered upon his arrival at the yard of his owner in North Plainfield, and occasioned much trouble before he could be dispatched.

A young son of R. A. Gibbs built a fire along side of his father's barn on Duer St. on Sunday afternoon last about 2½ o'clock, and would have burned down the structure in consequence but for the prompt discovery and extinguishment of the flames.

Considerable excitement has existed in certain circles the past week regarding the digging and filling up of a well on Johnston Drive. The facts of the case, as near as we can gather, from both parties interested, are as follows: In macadamizing the "Drive" it is necessary to use water to sprinkle the top dressing previous to rolling, and to procure the same for the use of the steam roller and cracker, and the precious fluid is scarce on top of the mountain where the drive is located except at one point known as "Vail's Spring" on property belonging to Mr. Wallace Vail, and through which the Drive runs. When Messrs. Hoxsie & Wadley received the contract for macadamizing this thoroughfare, Mr. Vail offered to them the use of this spring from which to procure water on the same terms as that offered by the Telford Pavement Company, should they receive the contract, viz:—that of macadamizing a strip of road from the Drive to the Spring, a distance of about 100 yards. At the time of the proposition, the offer was deemed fair by all parties concerned, but subsequently Messrs. Hoxsie & Wadley concluded that the cost would be too much, and therefore, commenced to sink a well on one side of the Drive immediately opposite the Spring from which they expected to get a supply of water adequate for their purposes. After water was reached at a depth of some 22 feet, the well was filled up with stone and dirt by some unknown parties on the night of July 7th. Messrs. Hoxsie & Wadley immediately issued hand bills offering a reward of $25 for the detection and conviction of the parties who filled up the well, and commenced again to open the same. On Wednesday evening last the workmen had some three feet of water, and fearing another attempt to close up the hole, a guard was stationed about the spot all night. About 5 o'clock on Thursday morning a force of workmen, under the guidance of Mr. Vail, arrived on the scene and immediately proceeded to fill up the well, despite the presence of Mr. Wadley and a force of his men summoned by him to prevent the act. Mr. Wadley inquired by whose orders the work was being done. Mr. Vail answered that they were there in his employ and commanded them to go on, which they did and the ground over the well was speedily smoothed over, after which both parties withdrew without any act of violence being done. It is likely that a law-suit will grow out of the affair, both parties having previously taken counsel in the matter. Without expressing our views on the matter either way, we must say that the affair is to be regretted, as it will probably delay the early completion of the road which is earnestly desired by those directly interested and the public generally. The whole bone of contention in the matter seems to be—"Whether the spot where the well was dug is considered a public highway or whether it is an encroachment upon private grounds." That the lawyers will probably settle.

The Washington Rock House is daily becoming more popular under the management of the Messrs. Staats Bros. The road leading to this delightful summer resort, on top of the mountain, have been put in thorough repair, and the ascent is easy. Many summer boarders are now stopping at the house and more are expected daily. The House is kept in first-class style and the charges moderate. Pic-nic parties cannot find a more desirable and cool place wherein to hold their gatherings. We were members of a private pic-nic party at this historic spot on Wednesday, and must say we were excellently treated by the proprietors. Everything that comfort or pleasure demanded was accorded upon asking, at most reasonable rates. We heartily recommend our friends to visit the Rock House if they desire a day's pleasure.

WESTFIELD WHIPS.

How are you Westfield Fire Department? Did you put that fire out at Sim Lambert's last Tuesday?

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

It is with feelings of regret that we learn that the good people of this village have been so short-sighted as to forever throw away their golden opportunity of macadamizing Park Avenue. This avenue is their principal and most direct thoroughfare to Fanwood Depot and of necessity is in constant use, and there is perhaps no road in this State that stands in greater need of being macadamized than this one. And while regretting this, we also regret that the land of our beautiful land are "so lacking" as to suffer one or two "croakers," who go about the streets crying, [illegible] big bond and [illegible] property," to thwart or [illegible] the whole of improvement in a whole neighborhood. There is a homely adage that "misery courts company" and more than one manager has a dog in it.

A large Surprise Party assembled at the residence of John C. Moore, of this village, Wednesday evening last. The occasion was one of unalloyed enjoyment. About 20 couples were present, and music and dancing was the order of the evening.

OBITUARY.

DEACON JOSHUA BROWN.

The exemplary Christian gentleman whose name heads this notice died at his late residence, near Westfield, on July 3rd, 1876, of Consumption, in the 68th year of his age.—Mr. Brown, at the time of his death, was a member of the well-known firm in Canal Street, New York, of Joshua Brown & Sons, and previous to this was of the firm of J. & S. Brown. Early in life he espoused the cause of the religion of Jesus Christ, and was baptized into the fellowship of the South Baptist Church, of the City of New York; after remaining a member there for very many years, he associated himself with the Berean Baptist Church. After his removal to Westfield he attended the Scotch Plains Baptist Church, until a movement was made for the organization of a Baptist Church in Westfield, when Mr. Brown became one of the charter members of that society and remained a faithful, liberal supporter of the cause in that place until the day of his death. Deacon Brown's funeral services were held in the Church at Westfield, on Thursday morning, July 6th, at 10 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Dowling, of N. Y., preaching the sermon from 1st Cor. 26. 13. Drs. Yerkes and Edgar, of Plainfield, and the Rev. Mr. Greaves, of Westfield, and the Rev. Mr. Ladd, of N. Y., were present and participated in the solemn exercises. There were also present a large concourse of mourning friends. The Church was heavily draped in mourning. The remains were taken to Greenwood for interment. His last words were,

"Jesus paid it all."

After which, he passed sweetly away into the arms of Jesus.

Corner Stone Laying.

The corner stone of Grace Church on the site of the re-erection of the Church edifice, corner of Sixth and Sycamore Streets, was laid with appropriate and impressive ceremonies, on Wednesday last, Bishop Scarborough officiating. In the box deposited were copies of the city papers, coins, papers, &c., also the following document relating to the birth and growth of Grace Church:

The Parish of Grace Church, Plainfield, N. J., was organized June 9, 1852, at a public meeting held in the house of worship belonging to the 7th Day Baptist congregation. The Rev. Philemon Elmer Coe presided. Mr. Richard Brantingham was chosen Secretary. James Oliver and Jasper Cadmus were elected Wardens, and Hugh Pattison, Elias Lynch, William Henry Ludlow, M. D., Jacob Wiggins, Richard Brantingham and George Windle were elected Vestrymen.

On May 10th, 1854, the Rev. P. E. Coe was elected Rector and continued to minister to the congregation faithfully and without any remuneration until Dec., 1858.

The corner stone of the Church was laid by the Rt. Rev. George Washington Doane, D. D., L. L. D., on July 12th, 1854. There were present, besides the Rector, the Rev. Messrs. Moore, Peet, Rowland and Clarkson, Chaplain in the Army. The Rev. W. W. Seaver succeeded Mr. Coe in a very brief Rectorship, and was followed by the Rev. J. L. G. Finney in May, 1861, who, after a short and successful ministry of two years, died at Nashotah, Wis., whither he had gone to rest and recruit his health.

In June, 1863, the Rev. R. G. Quennell was called to the Rectorship, and he continued to perform his duties until February, 1865, when he resigned.

In July, 1865, at a Vestry meeting, the subject of the Church debt and the disposing of the Church building and lot, and securing another place for public worship was referred to the Finance Committee with power, Messrs. Palmer, Merritt and Vail being the Committee.

July 20th, 1865, the Rev. Dr. S. C. Thrall was elected Rector, and remained until April, 1868.

June 1, 1868, the Rev. Dr. Charles M. Fox was elected Rector. During his rectorship the Church was enlarged by the addition of transcepts and recess chancel, at a cost of $6,000.

Mr. Mahlon Vail having presented a deed of the lot to the Vestry, and the mortgage held by the Rev. Mr. Coe having been cancelled by him, the Church was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. W. H. Odenheimer, D. D., on Monday, March 21st, 1870.

In September following the Rev. Dr. Fox resigned the Rectorship of the Church. He was succeeded by the present Rector, who entered upon his duties Nov., 1870.

The next year a Committee of the Vestry, consisting of Messrs. Smith, Brown and Dumont, was appointed to consult an Architect, and obtain estimates for enlarging the Church.

A contract with Messrs. Perrine & Doane was executed for this purpose April 5, 1872, at a cost of $5,000.

In the same year a new organ, costing $1,500, was purchased by the Parish Aid Society.

During the summer of 1875, the subject of the removal of the Church to a more central part of the city, was again agitated, as it had been ever and anon for ten years.

At a Parish meeting held in the 7th Day Baptist Church, Oct. 4th, 1875, Bishop Scarborough presiding, Mr. J. B. Dumont reported that the Committee on a suitable site had determined to recommend the purchase of one-half of the vacant lot, bounded by 7th, Sycamore and 6th Streets, owned by Mr. W. L. Jones, say 86 ft. x 200 ft. Subscriptions were then called for, and after an earnest appeal from the Bishop, $5,000 were reported by the Treasurer from donations and subscriptions.

On Sunday after Ascension, May 28th, 1876, the closing services was held in the Church, which it has been determined to take down and re-build on the lot corner of Sycamore and Sixth Streets.

It was further resolved that the Vestry rent the building, recently occupied by the Second Baptist congregation, until such time as Grace Church is re-built.

A contract for the removal and re-construction of the Church was entered into with Mr. T. O. Doane; the mason work being done by Mr. [illegible]; the painting by Mr. E. G. Morse; the whole work to be under the supervision of W. G. Morse, Esq., Architect.

From this brief sketch of the History of the Parish, it will be seen that we are engaged in executing what has been the hope and conviction of the Vestry and congregation for many long years.

I have been told that some years before the Parish was organized, Bishop Doane sent the Rev. Dr. Abraham B. Carter, Rector of the Church of the Holy Savior, New York City, who was at that time a candidate for Holy Orders in this Diocese, to hold services here, which was done in a private house, probably in what was known as the "[illegible] House," which is still standing at the corner of Central Avenue and Third Street. One of the sites under consideration, before the Church was erected on Front near Richmond Street, was a plot of land, owned by a Mr. [illegible], between [illegible] and [illegible] Streets, near [illegible] Street, but the offer was hampered with such conditions that the Vestry decided that it could not be accepted.

But time and again efforts have been made to solve the difficulty, which it was always felt was operating against the growth of the Parish, owing to the great distance of the Church from the centre of the population. Sometimes it has been sought to do this by an evening service in the more central part of the city, and at one time the Church was [illegible] [illegible], and all the services held in the Seventh Day Baptist Church. And then in the [illegible] of April, 1867, we find a resolution adopted by the Vestry "to return to the building owned by the Corporation on Front Street."

On both occasions when the Church was to be enlarged, in 1868 and in 1872, there were some who strongly urged removal instead of enlargement. On both occasions it was deemed wise to wait until the congregation had grown and strengthened, before undertaking any such movement as the purchase of land in the central part of the city and the erection of a new Church.

At length, after long and patient waiting, it was determined to buy a suitable plot of land and put the present building upon the rear of the lot until such time as subscriptions and donations would warrant the erection of a new Church; for one thing that the Vestry is unanimously determined upon is, that no large debt shall be incurred.

And so we have come hither, to-day, on the same day on which the similar service was performed when the smaller building was in course of erection, to ask the Bishop of the Diocese to lay the corner-stone of this humble structure and to invoke the Divine blessing upon this undertaking, that it may be begun, continued and finished in humble dependence on His Grace and favor, and redound to His honor and glory, and the extension of the kingdom of His Dear Son, our Savior Jesus Christ.

RECTOR—Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, M. A.
WARDENS—Messrs. Thos. Henry Edsall, John B. Dumont.
VESTRYMEN—Messrs. Samuel Huntington, William Patterson, Charles Tweedy, Augustus Pettibone, Thomas Pittis, Theo. B. Bleecker.
DELEGATES TO CONVENTION—Messrs. T. H. Edsall, Samuel Huntington and John B. Dumont. Alternates—Messrs. W. R. Cook, William McClure and William Smalley.
SEXTON—George L. Henry.

Upon removing the corner stone for the purpose of making some additions to the contents of the box, it was discovered that the box had been stolen.

We have deposited in this box a Journal of the 92d Convention of the Diocese, Constitution and Canons of the Diocese, Constitution of "The Laymen's Clerical Aid Society," Church Almanac for 1876, The King's Messenger for June, 1876, a form of service for Fourth of July, 1876, Visitors Guide to the Centennial Exhibition, The Churchman and Church Journal of last date, and copies of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST and Central New Jersey Times, New York Tribune Centennial Sheet and Independence Day, Extra, N. Y. Commercial Advertiser of July 10th, accompanied by a fac simile of the first issue of that paper as published Oct. 2, 1797.

COMMUNICATED.

For The Constitutionalist.

WASHINGTON ROCK, N. J., JULY 8, 1876.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

As some comments may have been made upon the substitution in part of string music for brass instruments at the late celebration at Washington Rock, it is due the public and the Committee to say that brass music was engaged some days before any public announcement and at least two weeks before the Fourth of July; that a day or two before the Fourth, Mr. Dodworth sent a verbal communication stating that he greatly regretted that he could not send wholly brass instruments and "that either some string music must be substituted or the engagement must be cancelled; that owing to the unprecedented demands and exactions of the Holiday the men would not leave New York." It was then too late to engage other music. It was therefore "Hobson's choice." As to the quality of the music no one could complain; the substitution of one kind for another was a matter wholly out of the power of the Committee to prevent, and for which the management should not be held responsible. That this change was the only deviation in the entire and lengthy programme shows how faithfully the Committee performed their labors. Words are inadequate to express by the undersigned the sense of gratitude they feel towards the thousands of ladies and gentlemen who honored this place on that day, and contributed so much by their presence to the grace and effectiveness of the Celebration.

Yours most respectfully,
STAATS BROS.
Proprietors Washington Rock Mountain House.

KIND WORDS.

The Plainfield Constitutionalist comes to us enlarged and improved. We are glad to see our neighbor and his popular and readable journal show such substantial signs of prosperity. Long may The Constitutionalist continue to be a bright and true exponent of Democratic principles in our State and Nation.—Hunterdon Co. Democrat.

The Plainfield Constitutionalist of last week, comes to us in an enlarged form, printed in the National colors, red and blue, on white paper. It is the best paper published in Union County, and Messrs. Force are to be congratulated for their enterprise and prosperity.—Sussex Co. Independent.

The Plainfield Constitutionalist of last week was printed on white paper, with red and blue ink, and flies the names of Tilden and Hendricks in the Centennial colors.—Mt. Holly Herald.

The Plainfield Constitutionalist of last week is printed on white paper, with red and blue ink, in honor of the Centennial. Our cotemporary is also much enlarged—an evidence of its prosperity on which we heartily congratulate it.—Clinton Democrat.

STATE NEWS.

Wm. Walter Phelps has begun a suit against George Foster, Collector of Palisade Township, Bergen County, for publishing his name in the list of delinquent taxpayers. Mr. Phelps says he has no interest in the land advertised, and that the advertisement has had a tendency to depreciate his financial standing. He asks for $10,000 damages.

The valuation of real and personal property in Middlesex county is $22,676,500. The State and county tax amount to $230,310.50. The city tax in New Brunswick is $220,940. The Times say: "The effect of the new law in reference to mortgages has caused a reduction of nearly $900,000 in the total amount of taxable personal property."

The comparative cost per pupil for public education in the principal cities of New Jersey, is given in the following official table from the report of the State Board of Education and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction for the year ending Aug. 31, 1875. The first column shows the average cost per pupil for tuition for nine months, based upon the average register number. The second column shows the average cost, based on the entire school census:

POLITICAL.

Carl Schurz has obtained employment. That little "accidental" meeting with Hayes at the Columbus depot continued long enough to fix the terms.

A correspondent of the New York Herald notices the fact that Gen. Custer's dead body was not scalped like the others found on the field, a rare mark of respect from such savage foes.

"Tilden Republicans" are turning up rapidly. They are a class of honest men who think for themselves, and see no hope of reform under an Administration that would go into power indorsed by Grant.

"Dead men tell no tales," says the St. Louis Times. "Custer will make no further revelation of 'crookedness' in the War Office. Grant sent him West, and the Sioux have effectually closed his mouth."

"From imbecility, if not from worse causes," says Thurlow Weed, "we are the worst governed nation in Christendom." This is the result of sixteen years of rule of the Republican party. The people now propose to change all this by electing Tilden and Hendricks.

Grant and "Sitting Bull" are taking in the scalps. The former already has at his belt the gory locks of those enemies of the whiskey ring, Bristow, Wilson and Yaryan, and he is now on the war path for the scalps of Commissioner Traft and others, whom he charges with "persecuting" his friends.

Thurlow Weed declares that "since the close of the war there has been, either from incompetency, recklessness or dishonesty in the Administration, an utter neglect and disregard of the interests of the country." This assertion the public indorse and purpose to change it with Tilden and reform, and secure an Administration that will pay some attention to the interests of the country.

It's about time the nonsense about the House crippling the army was stopped. The House Army Appropriation bill would not take effect till five days after Custer's defeat, and in fact has not passed at all. If money or troops were wanting in June, the Forty-third Congress is responsible in the first place—it provided the money; and Grant in the second place—he ordered the troops where they were not wanted and weakened the support of a brave soldier.

The friends of ex-State Treasurer Sooy are endeavoring to secure a pardon for him on the ground that his health is being impaired by close confinement.

A boy named Hayes, aged fourteen, a son of Jeremiah Hayes, was struck by lightning and instantly killed during the storm on Tuesday night, while sitting at the window of his father's residence in Metuchen.

Nearly all of the German papers of the United States support the democratic platform and go in favor of an honest reform, supporting Tilden and Hendricks.

Republican journals failing to find anything dishonorable in the personal or political character of the Democratic nominee for President and Vice President—Tilden and Hendricks—are trying to stir up strife in the Southern States. Another dodge is sacrificing some Republican office-holder and putting a democrat in his place thinking it will induce others to favor their treacherous schemes. After the 4th of March next there will a new set of house keepers, from the White House at Washington, down to the lowest office holder under Grant and his Administration.

Gen. Custer went to Washington at the call of the Committee of the House to testify as to the selling of the post-traderships, the swindling of the soldiers and Indians, and the corrupt condition of the Indian service generally. He told the truth, and as the truth disgracefully implicated Orvil Grant and his brother, the President, the last sent him back insulted. Gen. Custer took pains to call on Grant before leaving Washington, and Grant let him for hours cool his heels in an ante-room, and finally refused to see him. This was a fine way in which to treat a gallant soldier and former companion in arms. But the republican platform says that the administration merits the commendation of the people, and Hayes says, "I heartily concur."—True American.

WISTAR'S BALSAM WILD CHERRY

Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Croup, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Liver Complaint, Pains or Soreness in the Chest or Side, Bleeding at the Lungs, and every affection of the Throat, Lungs and Chest, are speedily and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which does not dry up a cough and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but loosens it, cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

Consumption Can be Cured

by a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials it has received. None genuine unless signed "I. BUTTS" on the wrapper. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Prepared by SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Boston, Mass. Sold by druggists generally.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

HE MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

Yesterday morning, as a well-dressed citizen was crossing the City Hall grounds, a thickset and very determined woman called on him to stop. He halted, and, as she hurried up, she asked:

"Do you keep a little store on Gratiot Avenue?"

"No, ma'am, I don't, nor a big store, either.

"Don't you lie to me!" she wheezed, blocking his way.

"Lie to you! Why, don't you know who I am?"

"I think I do. I think you are the reprobate who sold my John a little dried-up old corset without any lace-holes in the back, making him believe that it was one of those new-fashioned bustles!"

"Madam, I am not in the corset business—great Heavens! no!" exclaimed the man.

"You are the same man he described—short, blue eyes, faded whiskers and large ears! Don't think to deceive me! Don't think that because I'm an old woman I can't make a terrible example of you!"

"You are simply mistaken, ma'am," he said, waving his hand and starting off.

"There's guilt—that proves it!" she shouted, making after him.

He saw her on his trail, and he skipped into the hall, and disappeared from sight before she entered. She entered all the rooms on the first floor in her search, and when she realised that he had evaded her, she unrolled the corset, slammed it against the wall, and remarked to the laughing crowd:

"Gentlemen, you may laf and tickle and grin, but the pirate who swindled my innocent boy has got a panther on his trail, and he'd better look out for claws!"

VERY BAD BOYS.

Miss Clara Morris, in a letter to a friend in Washington, gives this lively reminiscence of two well-known actors: "They were boys then; one tall, blonde, and lazy, the other, short, dark, and active. It was Sunday night; every one had gone to the Quaker meeting-house a few doors above. They were alone without cards, checkers or books, but Satan came to the rescue. A certain proposal was drawled by the long chap, and eagerly accepted by the short one. They then put on their hats and coats, armed themselves with a broom, a pail of water and a dipper, and went forth into the still, bitter cold night and worked diligently. They swept a broad path over the sloping sidewalk, quite free from snow; over this they poured a dipper of water, then waited. In a few minutes it had frozen; then another dipper of water, and another one, until the path was glass-like in its icy smoothness. A whisk of the broom sent a light covering of snow over it; the work was done, and the godless laborers gathering up their tools, scrouged themselves down on the doorstep and conversed pleasantly. Presently the doors of the meeting-house opened, and two lines of Friends—one made up of males, the other of females—came out. These lines, coming down the steps separately met and mingled in a crowd on the pavement for a few moments, then broke in to twos and threes, and came gravely down the sidewalk. Suddenly the stillness of the night was broken by a whack! whack! and two snorts that were as one. A female friend flew to the rescue—whack! The whole congregation, filled with wonder, came ambling down to the scene of disaster—whack! whack! whack! loud groans and snorts, 'thees' and 'thous' filled the air, and with cheeks stained with tears of laughter, they sat on the step and 'took it in,' those sons of Belial, since so well known to the world as Joe Jefferson and John Ellsler."

BACK PAY.

Some years ago a certain Detroiter settled a debt by giving his note of hand. The holder tried for two years to collect it, and then filed it away.—The other day he had an opportunity to work it off on an innocent party, and shortly after so doing he encountered the maker of the note, and said:

"Now you'll have to come to time! I've sold that note of yours!"

"You don't say so!"

"Yes, I have; got it off on a man for seven dollars."

"See here, Tom," said the debtor, in a pleading voice, "if you got seven dollars for that forty dollar note against me, and you won't give me at least two dollars, I'll never do another favor for you in my life!"

PERHAPS NOT.

The other evening a carriage had to come to a dead halt to prevent running over a child three or four years old, who was wedged in the centre of the street.

"Is that your child?" asked the [illegible] and beckoned to the dust-covered offspring.

"Guess he is," was the slowly-spoken answer.

"Aren't you afraid he'll be run over some day?"

"He may be. His brother was run over last year about this time, and the folks made up a purse of one hundred dollars for me!"

Perhaps the memory of that purse had nothing to do with the other child being in the road.

HARD HEAD.

Awful Gardiner was once a well-known pugilist and sporting character in New York. On one occasion he went to Newark with a select party of plug uglies to give a sparring exhibition. The negro who had charge of the hall where the show was to take place was of gigantic stature, and one of the party wagered a bottle of wine that Awful Gardiner could not knock the negro down with his fist. They all waited in the hall for the coming of the sable janitor with lights. He approached with a candle shaded in his hands and as he came within arm's reach, the Awful measured him and struck square from the shoulder. The negro hardly winked. He simply turned his head round towards the pugilist, and said, "Gemmen, please be a little car'ful of yer elbows."

ADVERTISEMENTS FROM ENGLISH JOURNALS.

Wanted, a lady who would have no objection to sleep with another in a public road where omnibuses pass every five minutes.

A piano-forte to be sold, genuine Broadwood, by a lady about to leave England in a fine rosewood case on mahogany castors.

Wanted to wash and cook a respectable female in a Christian family.

A Christian woman wishes a situation as cook in a private family. Her last employer having been a dancing-master she is perfectly able to teach that art as well as cook, wash and iron. Her superior abilities entitle her to sittings in a church of position, the sexton of which is own brother to her step-sister.

NEW JERSEY Enamel Paint Company,
RARITAN, NEW JERSEY.
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best Materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either in side or outside work or boat painting than any oil or Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use.
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.
Liberal Inducements to Dealers.
And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.

Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price List and Sample Color Card, Address,

GORDON'S FOOD
FOR
Horses, Cattle and Poultry.

Used in Europe for 12 Years.
Horses fed on this system are always in a good and healthy condition. Cows give as much milk as when fed on the rich Spring grass.

[illegible] BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J., March 16, 187[illegible].—Mr. H. S. Spader—Dear Sir: In reply to your inquiry I have been using your Gordon Food for some time and am satisfied with the result. I had a horse whose [illegible] for a few weeks he became quite well, which I attribute entirely to said Food. I shall continue to use it as a profitable food to keep my horses in good condition. It produces perfect digestion and purifies the blood. Yours truly,
W. A. BRINTZINGHOFFER.

ATLANTIC STABLES, BOARDING AND SALE, Nos. 14 and 16 ATLANTIC ST., NEWARK, N. J., March 14, 1876.—Mr. H. S. Spader—Dear Sir: I have used the Gordon Food for six months. I believe it to be a good article and all it is recommended for.
Yours respectfully, E. W. PELOUBET.

LEGAL NOTICES.

SHERIFF'S SALE.—In Chancery of New Jersey—Between The New York Life Insurance Company, complainant, and Paul Grignard, and wife, and als., defendants. Fi. fa. for sale of mortgaged premises.

By virtue of the above-stated writ of fieri facias to me directed, I shall expose for sale at public vendue, at the Court House, in the city of Elizabeth, N. J., on Wednesday, the 19th day of July, A. D. 1876, at two o'clock p. m. of said day, all those two certain tracts of land and premises, situate, lying and being in the township of Westfield, county of Union and State of New Jersey, and described as follows, viz.:

Beginning at a stake or post on the easterly side of the main road, leading past Gross Pierson's house to Cranford, said post being a corner where Jersey avenue lately laid out for a street by Edward J. Annin [illegible]

The Second Tract—Beginning at a post standing in the westerly side of the old road leading from Westfield to Elizabeth [illegible]

Being the same premises conveyed by two deeds—the first tract from Cornelius A. Leveridge to Sidonie Grignard, dated October 15, 18[illegible], and recorded in liber 41, on page 21, &c. The Second by deed from Edward J. Annin and wife, to Sidonie Grignard, dated November 1[illegible], 187[illegible], recorded in liber 51, pages [illegible] of deeds for Union county.

N. K. THOMPSON, Sheriff.

Magie & Cross, Sol'rs. [illegible]

Elizabeth, N. J., May 11, 1876. [illegible]

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., Anna E. Mellick his wife, and Stephen M. Blake.

By virtue of an Order of the court of chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof in a cause therein pending, wherein Cornelius W. L. Martine is complainant, and Andrew D. Mellick, Jr. and others are defendants, you are required to appear and plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant, on or before the fifteenth day of July next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage made by said Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., to Anna Maria Martine, dated January 1[illegible], 187[illegible], on lands in the township of Plainfield, in Union county and State of New Jersey, and by said Anna Maria Martine assigned to the complainant. And you Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., are made defendant, because you are the owner of the lands in said bill mentioned, and because the bill prays a decree against you for any deficiency there may be of the proceeds of said lands to pay the mortgage debt, interest and costs. And you, Anna E. Mellick are made defendant, because you are the wife of said Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., and thereby may claim an inchoate right of dower in said lands.—And you, Stephen M. Blake, are made defendant, because you hold a mortgage on said lands in said Bill described.

POETRY.

MARRIAGE SONG.

BY [illegible]

Sweet be the stars that glimmer
Above your paths of life;
Sweet be the faith and glory,
Sweet be the dear old story;
Ah! love, dear love, forever
[illegible] these two hearts from strife.

O love! thy sacred meaning
Is in the faith divine
That binds two souls together,
That holds through sunny weather
And through the falling darkness
Truth's majesty as thine.

O time! dost thou not cherish
What men do cherish still?
Day's radiance softly covers
The steadfast faith of lovers,
Life's tenderness blossom
Where souls have learned to thrill.

O time! dost thou not cherish
The union born for time?
No love is meant to sunder;
True love is love whose wonder
Grows lovelier with the ages,
Forever in its prime.

Ah! ye who now are treading
Where older souls have trod—
List to the deeper teaching
Of life far-spread, far-reaching,
List to the hopes sublimest
That bloom in Man and God.

Sweet be the years whose brightness
Swells through the glad to-day;
Sweet be the life ye cling to,
Sweet be the faith ye sing to,
Sweet be the truth ye follow,
Sweet be the prayers ye pray.

SLEEP ON, MY HEART, SERENELY!

Sleep on, my heart, serenely!
To the tired petals of the flowers
The night has brought a quiet rest
In the dew's refreshing showers.

Sleep on, my heart, serenely!
In peace the whole earth sleeps,
While, like the watchful eye of God,
The moon its vigil keeps.

Sleep on, my heart, serenely!
Bid care and sorrow flee;
For He who watches o'er the world
Has constant thought for thee.

Sleep on, my heart, serenely!
Drive fearful dreams away,
And, strengthened by the might of Faith,
Welcome with hope the day.

Sleep on, my heart, serenely!
And if to thee is given
Death's summons for thy soul to-night,
So shalt thou wake in heaven.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE WHITE LILY.

I am eighty-one years old to-night when the clock strikes twelve. My name is Ezra Steele, and I was born in the city of New York. It was a different place then from what it is now, and people walked in the Bowery for fresh air, and thought Pearl street pretty far up town.

Our home was almost out of town—nearly where Canal street is to-day. We had a garden about it, and our garden touched that of a neighbor, who was a German by birth, and fond of his flowers as a German can be.

He had beds of great gaudy tulips and wonderful roses and double poppies, but I used to think the sweet white lilies the prettiest of all, and I always thought little Gretchen just like one of them.

She never had much color, but her forehead was like snow, and her hair, long and light, curled down to her waist.

She used to come to her side of the fence and look over it, and talk about such things as we were interested in. Sometimes she came in to play with me, but my mother would never allow me to go into neighbor Werner's garden, for fear that I should injure the flowers, through which I could never learn to walk quietly and reverentially, as Gretchen did.

Indeed, neighbor Werner was not fond of children, and not one to tempt them into his garden or his house, or anywhere where the would be apt to meet him; a gruff, oldish man, who had lost his wife years before, and had no-one in his house to care for his little girl, who was quite left to herself, and had a womanly way with her at the age of ten that some have not at sixteen.

She knew even then how to make her father's soup and coffee, and how to put the buttons on his shirts. Work which was too much for her little hands he must have done himself; but the house was very clean and bare and tidy, not a carpet on any floor, and not a blanket, for—as my mother said, who had seen—they slept between feather beds, as though they wanted to smother themselves.

But such as the house was, little Gretchen took more and more care of it as she grew older, and helped her father with his flowers, and knew each individual blossom. It used to seem to me that they knew her.

While I was very young, a mere child in years, I used to say that Gretchen should be my little wife, my mother always answering:

"I couldn't wish you a better, if she grows up what she is now."

When I was older I stopped saying this out of shame, but I thought so more than ever. I knew before I was old enough to be called a man that I should never love any one but Gretchen Werner. She never thought about it at all, until I put it into her head by making love to her.

For a while she was very shy, and would not listen to me; but at last she told me that she liked me better than any one else in the world, and let me kiss her.

I had not known her before since I was ten years old. Then I was one-and-twenty. I have seen young men kiss the girls they love in a light, careless way. I felt that night as though I were touching something holy with my lips.

A few days after this I gave her a plain gold ring with our names upon it, and the date of the day on which she told me she liked me, and it seemed as though that bound her to me.

I was not as good as I might have been, and did not go to church always when my mother wanted me to do so; but I prayed that night as earnestly as ever man prayed that I might be worthy of Gretchen; that I might always know what to do to make her happy, and always be able to keep her from any of the troubles and trials of poverty.

After this, in our American fashion, which seems so wrong to Englishmen and Europeans, I asked her father if I might have Gretchen.

"She has told me that she will be happy with me," I said, and stood trembling before him, hat in hand, for I saw a cloud upon his forehead, and saw him take the pipe out of his mouth in a hurried way, which always showed that he was angry.

"You speak to Gretchen first?" he asked, in his strong German accent. "You dare do that?"

"We always do it here, sir," I said. "We try to find out whether the young lady is willing we should speak to her parents, and then—"

But neighbor Werner stamped his foot furiously.

"I am a German," he said. "My daughter obeys me. She will not marry a poor man."

"I am poor yet," I said, "but I will make my fortune some day. I will, indeed—I—"

He laughed.

"You are not worth being angry with, boy," he said. "All I will say to you is you can not have Gretchen. I have other plans for her."

Then he turned his back upon me, and walked away among his tulips, leaving me angry and defiant.

I never thought of giving Gretchen up, however; and when for days the old man kept her from me, and do what I might I could catch no glimpse of her, I vowed to punish him for his cruelty by running away with her and marrying her against his will.

If she loved me, she would not be willing to be separated from me. I thought, and fancied her locked up in her own room, kept from meeting me by force. I wandered about the house of old neighbor Werner like a ghost, and almost determined to force an entrance; but at last she came to me, one sunny afternoon, and looked over the fence, with her arms folded upon it, as she used to when she was a child.

"Gretchen!" I cried, and ran to her and put my arms about her. "Gretchen, my darling, you have come to me at last."

She gave a little sigh, and drew herself away from my embrace.

"It is for the last time, Ezra," she said. "Father told me that I might bid you good-by."

"Good by!" I faltered.

"Yes," she said; "I must never talk to you again."

"You have promised to be my wife," I said. You have said you loved me. What do you mean?" He has frightened you by locking you up. You think that his power is absolute."

"No one locked me up," she said, quietly. "I have been told to stay within doors out of your sight, and I obeyed. It was wrong of me to promise anything without father's leave. I thought it was different in such a case, and I liked you so, but I know now how unmaidenly it was. Father has told me."

"You stayed from me of your own free will," I said. "You were not restrained. O, Gretchen!"

"Fathers gave me his orders. One must obey one's parents. It is God's law," she said.

"Easy to obey when you are willing," I said, bitterly. "Parents could not keep me from you if you wanted me, Gretchen."

The tears were falling fast over her cheeks. She was sobbing heavily.

"O, Ezra, if you only knew," she said, "I must obey."

Then she drew the ring I had given her from her finger.

"Father says I must return this," she said, and it seemed as though she could not speak for weeping.

But I was cruel to her.

"Of your own free will, because you do not care for me?" I asked.

"I cannot change my feelings," she said. "Perhaps they are wrong, but I must always like you better than any one else. But father says I must not marry you, and that I must give back the ring."

I felt it drop into my palm. I clutched it fiercely. There was a flat stone close by the fence, and I dropped the ring on that, and ground it to atoms beneath my heel. She only sobbed the more.

"Don't be angry with me, Ezra," she said. "It is not my fault."

But I would not listen to her. I turned from her and walked away. Judging by myself, she could not care for me, if any thought of obedience could stand between us.

That night I packed my portmanteau, and left home. I could not stay there so near her, and yet have nothing more to do with her.

I never forgot her for a moment, but I did not talk of the past to any one.

I had an Uncle in Detroit, and I went to him. He was a farrier, and taught me his business, and soon I was able to make money at it. But money was nothing to me now, except so far as it was needed to enable me to live from day to day. I sent it to my parents, and they, needing nothing, put it away in the bank with the little store they were saving for my good.

"But we are glad to have such an industrious son," said my mother; "and when you bring home some pretty Canadian girl, you will be glad to have a little nest-egg to start with."

I had no thought of any girl, however pretty, for a wife; but mother could not guess how deeply I had been wounded.

Day and night I kept thinking of Gretchen, and always I kept on my bedroom window-sill, in a china pot, one of those pure white lilies, which always reminded me of her. But I never asked a question about her, and five years passed by—five anniversaries of our betrothal day, and I did not know even whether she had married, or was yet Gretchen Werner.

It was the sixth anniversary of that day when I went home to my little room earlier than usual. I had been strangely nervous all day, starting at any sound, and feeling as though every time the door opened that some one had come to bring me evil news. And I had thought of Gretchen a great deal and it seemed to me that writing a long letter home to my mother would comfort me.

I sat down to my desk near the window, the shadow of the lily I always mentally called Gretchen falling over the papers when the evening wind swayed it. The sun was going down, and all was very calm and peaceful. A kind of Sabbath hush seemed to have fallen on every thing, and I wondered why it was.

I told you that I had never asked a word about Gretchen before; that day I added a postscript to my letter:

"Is Gretchen Werner well, and living near you?" I asked. "Tell me something about her."

Just as I said these words the lily swayed more darkly over my paper, and I looked up. Beside the lily stood Gretchen, white as the flower itself, and robed in white.—Her long, fair hair dropped over her bosom, and between her crossed hands lay a bunch of lily flowers as they are laid on the bosom of the dead. She smiled as I looked at her, but never stirred.

"Gretchen!" I cried, "Gretchen! Gretchen!" and she smiled again, and seemed to vanish in the smile, and I fell on the floor in a swoon, for I knew that I had seen Gretchen's departing spirit.

I was ill for many days, and before I had recovered a letter came from home—a letter from my mother.

"How strange it is that you should have spoken of Gretchen Werner in your last letter for the first time," she wrote. "My son, I'm afraid the news will grieve you. On the day on which your letter is dated she died, just at sunset. I think that she must have always been fond of you, for she never seemed to think of any one else, and declared that she would never marry. But a few months ago neighbor Werner actually went so far as to command her to give her hand to a friend of his, a rich old German. She pleaded hard, but he was not to be moved, and she thought she must obey, poor child. The wedding-dress was made, and all ready for the nuptials, when they found her dead.

"I think her father killed her as much as if he had stabbed or poisoned her. The doctors call it heart-disease. She was lovelier than any thing I ever saw when I saw her last, in her coffin, with white lilies on her bosom. She was good and pure and true, and she has always loved you, my child. I am a woman, and can read another woman's heart. She has always loved you."

I knew it then. I went home to my parents very soon, and never left them again. I live in the old house now, and on my window-sill there always stands a white lily. Believe it or not, once a year, at sunset on the anniversary of our betrothal eve, I have ever since seen Gretchen standing near it, smiling upon me.

I think it is an omen that God will reunite us in heaven, where, though there is no marrying or giving in marriage, I may still call my white lily, my pure, true-hearted darling, my own; still wed her in the spirit, and dwell with her through all eternity among the angels.

THE NEW SCHOOL DIRECTOR.

Mr. Timothy Search was highly elated over his election to the vacant chair in the School Board of his district, and he at once begin to take a great interest in educational affairs. He wanted plain teaching, he said; didn't want any highfalutin learning forced upon the scholars, and declared that he would kick the first teacher out of the school-house who attempted to stuff the children with any new-fangled notions. Therefore the new director was startled when his most promising son told him that the teacher proposed to introduce algebra into the school.

"What kind of a study is that?" asked Mrs. Search. "Timothy, I'll be bound that it's some outlandish book that dominie has writ. My son's brains shan't be stuffed with it."

"Doesn't the sound of the name tell you what kind of a study it is?" answered Search. "Why, it's the history of a new-fangled animal related to the zebra, I suppose. Blamed if he shall teach it in this school district!"

That very afternoon the new director visited the school for the first time. He was graciously received by the new teacher, who was listening to a class in geography.

"I understand, sir, that you want to introduce the history of the algebra into this school?" said Search.

"I had thought of doing so."

"Had thought of it, eh? Well, let it go no farther than that. I don't want my children to know any thing about such outlandish animals. The algebra may run wild in his native, but we don't want him troubling the children in our schools, that we don't."

"But, Mr. Search, the new study will assist the scholars in mathematics."

"See here, that's thin. If I would read the history of the rhinoceros, could I subtract any better than I do? Would the biography of the giraffe enable me to multiply with more facility? Now, sir, answer these questions, and tell me how the history of the algebra could advance the children in arithmetic."

"You misunderstand me, sir," said the teacher. "Algebra is not an animal—no more so than hydrostatics."

"Hydro-thunder!" exclaimed Search. "I suppose you'd like to introduce astronomics into the school. With my consent no tomfoolery shall be taught in this district. The algebra is as much an animal as the gyascutas is, and if I hear another word about teaching its history to our scholars, I'll be blamed if you can't leave."

"Sir, I regret that we differ. What shall I teach?"

"Teach good common-sense, sir," said Search; "teach that this world is flat, as reason and our eyesight tell us. We don't want any round worlds swingin' on nothin' in this district, and we don't care if the sun is ninety-five million miles off. Teach the boys that Andy Johnson was a better man than Columbus, and if I hear that you try to make them believe that Martin Van Buren was elected President honestly, darned if you can't leave this district. We had a feller teachin' here once who talked about Cromwell, Braddock, and a lot of other old Romans, and I worried the directors till they turned him off. You needn't teach the girls anything in particular; they learn too fast anyhow. That other teacher filled their heads full of Clio—somebody, till they called the boys Anthony and Cæsar. We want good, solid education. If you know how old Crœsus made his money, tell the boys, but don't stuff their heads full of the filthy habits of algebra, or any other wild beast. The show business is not payin' this summer, and we don't want our boys to be Barnums and Dan Rices. You might tell them how Ben Franklin caught thunder and lightnin' in a bottle, for that is scientific, but tell them to keep away from walnut trees in a thunder storm."

"You've have no objection to me teaching a little hygiene?"

"I have sir. No new-fangled doctrines in this school, I tell you. No high giene and no low giene, but if you want to introduce Robinson Crusoe into the school, I'll assist you. But no such studies as algebra and high giene while I'm director. After while you'll want to teach that the earth isn't half as big as the sun. Darn your highfalutin stuff!"

The teacher has a hard row to hoe in Timothy's district and he doesn't teach algebra either.

THE FROST-BITTEN MAN.

The last man had very long hair, a very sad expression of countenance, and he didn't rush his remarks at the court, as many prisoners do. He introduced himself as John Goodheart, and then waited like the polite man he was for his honor to get back with something just as classical. And his honor did. He replied:

"Yum—'tis, eh?"

"And I was figuratively drunk," continued the prisoner.

"Was, eh?"

"Figuratively drunk, but practically frost-bitten," continued the long-faced man.

"W-h-a-t!" exclaimed the court.

"Pratically frost-bitten, sir. I went out to work in the garden, felt myself freezing to death, started for the house, and was picked up by this gentleman here with a club buckled around him."

His Honor looked him up and down in amazement. Liars often put in an appearance before him, but he had never before met with such a cool, complacent liar.

"Yes; thermometer went right down on me," sighed the old man.

The court motioned for him to go out, and he went, followed by looks of wonder from every spectator. He wasn't insane, and he wasn't wicked. He simply hated truth with an undying vigor.—Detroit Free Press.

ODD NUMBERS.

He was a man who didn't believe in the old saying that there's luck in odd numbers. He had a large patch on his right knee, and a large patch on the left knee to match it.—Both coat-tails were gone, the buttons were off of both sides of his vest, and both eyes had been blacked by some one's fists. His hair was parted in the middle, and no man in town could have been more evenly balanced.

"Were you run over by a drove of cattle?" asked his Honor, as he looked down upon Mr. Austin.

"I don't remember that I was," replied the man.

"Is that your every-day style of wearing your eyes, or were you had them decorated for some special occasion?" queried the court.

"I think I had a fight," was the hesitating reply.

"It does look like it. I suppose you mangled the other man all to pieces?"

"I suppose so."

"What is your programme now?"

"I expect to be sent up for twenty-eight days."

"Yes, I expect you will be. It isn't right for strangers to come here and raise rows, and I'm glad to find a man who feels as I do. But I'll have to say thirty days."

"Don't. Make it twenty-eight or thirty-two."

"Thirty is my lowest figure," continued the court; "but you can make even numbers by serving sixteen days and then fourteen more. It will need at least thirty days to restore your eyes to their right color and get your coat-tails wired on. Take a seat on the whitewash pail, Mr. Austin, and I believe there's a piece of cocoanut in there somewhere for you to wear away time on." Detroit Free Press.

GOING TO CHURCH IN 1800.

In the biography of the late Rev. Dr. Goodell, veteran missionary and Oriental scholar, he gives this picture of the way they went to church in Templeton, his native place, at the beginning of the century:

"The old puritanical horse seemed to understand, as well as the most pious of us, that it was holy time, and he stood at the door saddled and bridled, with his head bowed reverently down, as if in solemn meditation upon the duties he was expected to perform. My father, with one of the children in his arms, rode before; my mother rode behind on a pillion, and carried one of the children in her arms, and still another child rode close behind, clinging as closely to her as she did to her husband. I recollect that on one occasion, in ascending a steep, sandy hill, the girth of the saddle gave way, and there was an avalanche of the whole load, father, mother, and three children, with the saddle and pillion, over the horse's tail, plump into a sandbank. The old rheumatic horse never seemed surprised at anything that happened, but this time he simply opened his large eyes wider than usual, and, wheeling half round, looked to see whether he could help us in any way."

UP-HILL BUSINESS.

About eight o'clock Monday morning a boy, whose upper front teeth hang out a good deal further than the law required, entered a saloon kept by an old man, and remarked:

"Did you ever see a barrel roll up hill?"

"I don't remember ef I ever seen such tings or not," replied the old man.

"Well, you come out here if you want to see me make a barrel roll up hill like a streak of lightning."

The old man went to the door with him, and the boy pointed out a barrel of salt, placed a stick on it, crossed the street and returned, and went around the corner, saying:

"She'll begin to move in a minute or two, and then look out for your shins!"

"I look a leedle oudt, and I stood aroundt there a long time," explained the old man to a policeman, "but dot parrel no more moof as my house moofs now. Ven I comes in again once more I finds dot some one has daken seven dollars from my money-drawer. How vhas dot for a pad trick!"

A HEAVY PURCHASER.

A charcoal pedler was around on Nelson Street, Saturday, shouting his wares. Espying a man leaning over the gate, he cried:

"Want any charcoal, Mr.?"

"What kind of coal have you got?" asked the man, leaving the gate and going up to the wagon.

"Red ash," said the dealer, "the very best in use," and threw the reins across the horses back and jumped down to the ground and went around to the back of the wagon to help the customer.

"This is the best charcoal that can be obtained, eh?" inquired the Nelson Street man, anxiously.

"There's none to beat it, you bet!" exclaimed the enthusiastic vender.

"Perhaps you're right, but I don't want to get taken in," said the customer, musingly. "I got some, the other day, which was said to be the best; I got it for the stomach ache, but it didn't help me a mite, as I could see. But if you think your coal will do the business, I'll take a piece."

The dealer could not have made more noise in climbing over the pyramids than he did in getting up into that cart.

HOW TO GET RID OF FLIES.

The Rev. George Meares Drought, writing from Ireland, says: "For three years I have lived in a town, and during that time my sitting room has been free from flies, three or four only walking about my breakfast-table, while all my neighbors' rooms were crowded. I often congratulated myself on my escape, but never knew the reason of it until two days ago. I then had occasion to move my goods to another house, while I remained for two days longer. Among other things moved were two boxes of geraniums and calceolarias, which stood in my window, the window being always open to the full extent, top and bottom. The boxes were not gone half an hour before my room was as full of flies as those around me. This, to me, is a new discovery, and perhaps it may serve to encourage others in that which is always a source of pleasure, and which now proves also to be a source of comfort, viz.: window-gardening."

TOO SMART FOR THE RASCALS.

Only those who are wide awake now appear to escape the clutches of sharpers. A few days ago a person went to a Philadelphia bank to draw money to pay the wages of hands in a manufactory. Two men stood near the place where was counting over the amount he had received, some eighteen hundred dollars. One of the men remarked to him, "You've dropped a one dollar note, sir," pointing to a greenback of that denomination on the floor. "All, right, sir," was the reply, "I'll just put my foot on it for the present," which he did, and continued counting his money. It was not until the sharpers learned that they were trying their game on an experienced customer that they informed him the one dollar note was dropped by one of them. Any thoughtless person would have stooped for the note, and in all probability have lost the eighteen hundred dollars.

He was reading to his wife about an accident and casually remarked, "I dare say there was a woman at the bottom of it," when something transpired that made him grasp his head in both hands and rub it deliriously as if there had been a woman at the top of it.

CHEAP DINNER.

A colored man in Detroit has a sign on his house reading, "Meals for eight cents." The sign attracted the attention of a hungry man of color, the other day, and he stepped in and said he would have a dinner. A slice of bread and a bowl of water was placed on the table, and he was told to draw up.—"What sort of meal is dat?" he demanded, drawing away instead of drawing up. "Dat's an eight-cent meal, my friend."—"I ain't prepared to squar' off in front of no such dinner," growled the stranger, getting out of doors. "It isn't no festival, dat's true," replied the proprietor, "but when the price is limited down to eight cents, you must spec the food will be limited down to about two courses. Dat's bread and dat's water, and if you want to make it ten cents, I'll put on de pepper box and a knife and fork."

HIS SLEEPLESSNESS.

"I'm habbin' a heap o' trouble wid sleeplessness dese nights," remarked an old darkey, the other day.

"Ho-ho! I reckon I knows all 'bout dat," said another African near by.

"Yo' knows noffin—dat's what yo' knows," replied the old man.

"Sartain I do know suthin'," chuckled the other; "I knows well 'nuff dat yo' can't sleep o' nights, an' 'sides, I knows dat yo' neighbo's can't nuther, ef dey's got any chickens."

The old darkey looked grieved at these words, and as he turned away he expressed his opinion of them by mumbling, "Ef dere's anything that I hates, it's to see two culled gemmen allus quarrellin' wid each other—'specially when dey's bofe ob de same professiob."

Democratic Nominations.

For President,
SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
OF NEW YORK.

For Vice President,
THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
OF INDIANA.

REFORM.

In the present Presidential campaign Reform is boldly inscribed upon the Democratic banners, not as a hackneyed expression, but with positive intent.

Gentlemen of the Grant-Republican faith treat reform as an idle word. Not so the thoughtful masses of the people, who see in it the restoration of public honor and individual prosperity.

The country is suffering for the want of a thorough reform in its administration of affairs.

A reform that will reduce taxation by bringing expenditures within the limit of legitimate necessity.

That will revive business activity by striking off the fetters forged by mercenary legislation, and thereby leave every industrial pursuit an equal and just opportunity for development.

That will make the legal tender currency what the Constitution clearly declares it shall be—gold and silver coin.

That will restore to its original glory and national profit American Commerce, now almost entirely driven from the seas.

That will appoint to official positions men distinguished for virtue, honesty and ability, and not dismiss them from the public service because of independent integrity.

That will place in authority, from the National Capitol to the smallest village Post Office, men ambitious only to advance the public good, and whose daily life actions reflect credit upon the American name.

That will not only arrest, but consign to merited disgrace and punishment every class of public robbers, no matter whom or how disguised, be they Cabinet Ministers, Executive Secretaries, Foreign Ambassadors, Lobbyists, Post-Traders, Contractors or Ring Thieves.

To inaugurate such a reform is the determined purpose of the Democratic party in nominating and it becomes every citizen who desires to witness and derive benefit from a return of the purer and better days of the Republic, to rally with zeal for their triumphant election.

GRANT.

Some find it difficult to conceive what can be the matter with President Grant. His conduct, since the nomination of Gov. Hayes, has been of so extraordinary a character, that some of his best friends have been compelled to entertain doubts of his sanity. Certainly there is much in his recent proceedings to justify this opinion in the minds of those who have not studied the subject. But to us it is clear that he is as sane to-day as he was when he entered the Presidency nearly eight years ago. The outlines of his career, which can readily be filled up by all who read or who are acquainted with the course of events for the last seven years, may give us some clue to the proceedings which are causing the wonder of to-day. It was not long after his inauguration when he succeeded in concentrating into his own hands the whole power of the Republican party. How that power was employed the country to-day well knows.

He surrounded himself with relations and cronies and during the whole of his first term, assisted by them, he so manipulated the party and arranged his plans that at its end he stood without a competitor for a second term. All who opposed him or his measures, in any way or in any direction, even though they were the oldest, the ablest and the purest of the party, were degraded officially, read out, as the phrase is, or reduced to a ready and abject obedience, precisely as he is doing or attempting to do now. The result of all this was that he became actually the Autocrat of the party and his dictates were in all cases swiftly performed with fear and trembling. He was nominated for a second term and elected, and then began those proceedings which for the last four years have disgraced the country and made his name odious.—So powerful was his hold, as he conceived, upon the people and complete his control of his party that, despite the course he had pursued, he thought it only necessary to announce his wish for a third term of office to have it gratified; but he deceived himself; another was nominated and his dreams of future power, emolument and ease were dispelled forever. There was nothing left him but vengeance, and of that he speedily availed himself. The best and the truest men of his party were struck down; like the Irishman at Donnybrook Fair, wherever he saw a head he struck at it; and thus gratifying his spite, he will in all probability go on until the end of his term will relieve the country from an Administration, the only one infamous in its history.

A quiet contemplation of this man's course since he has occupied the Presidential chair, and that of the party that has supported him through it all, ought to be sufficient, it appears to us, to determine the people to get rid of them once for all. The election of Hayes will be but a continuance of this rule, it cannot prove otherwise. A change of Administration, through the election of Tilden, is our only salvation.

Frank W. Reed, the founder of the Republican party, emphatically endorses the St. Louis ticket.

The Independent Hour, of Woodbridge, pays the following just tribute to the worth of Hon. Miles Ross, our Representative in Congress: "The Democracy of the State of New Jersey, and also of the nation, should congratulate themselves upon the fact that the above-named gentleman has been appointed, not only a member of the Democratic National Committee, but also a member of the National Executive Committee. It is the latter Committee which really performs the heavy work of a political campaign, and Mr. Ross will undoubtedly prove himself an active efficient and leading member thereof.—Mr. Ross is an excellent organizer, and his position upon the Committee will secure for New Jersey an organized campaign superior to any which the Democracy of the State have heretofore enjoyed."

When Tweed and his confederates were pillaging the Treasury of the City of New York, making of themselves criminals, and casting reproach upon the Democratic party, through whose influence they had been unfortunately elevated into power, it was a prominent man of that party who boldly arrested the thieving gang, searched out evidence of their guilt, and faltered not in driving them into the clutches of offended justice. The name of that bravely honest man is SAMUEL J. TILDEN, and he is now the Democratic candidate for President of the United States. At his hands official rascals will receive their just deserts. That kind of gentry don't want Uncle Samuel elected President. They have reasons for their choice.

No longer let us hear the impertinent question, "Can any good thing come out of Plainfield?" for behold, that stronghold of Grantism is setting an example which other sections of the county may profit by following. On Monday evening a meeting was held whereat the young Democratic and Independent voters came together and organized the first Reform Club known in the history of that municipality, and the names of Tilden and Hendricks are inscribed upon their banners. Plainfield, we congratulate you.—Elizabeth Herald.

At a grand Democratic ratification meeting at Jersey City last Friday night, a letter from Gov. Bedle was read which concluded as follows: "I am fully satisfied that in all its aspects the ticket adopted at St. Louis is the strongest that could have been made. It is a ticket of brains and executive power.—Its leading citizen has a clear head, sound judgment, integrity, and force of character unequalled. Mr. Tilden is the representative of the strong element of reform. None has a stronger will or greater ability to accomplish the great work ahead.

The English war-ship "Thunderer" while on an experimental trip, a few days since, exploded her boiler, killing some forty persons. The English navy has been singularly unfortunate lately. Among the complete losses were those of the turret-ship Captain and the iron-clad Vanguard. POLITICAL.

Mr. Edward Ransom, President of the recent Constitutional Convention of North Carolina, and the Republican candidate for Congress in the First District of that State two years ago, announces his intention to take the stump for the St. Louis ticket. He was a Grant elector in 1872.

Hon. W. N. Reardon, for twenty-five years the law partner and bosom friend of Abraham Lincoln, at a ratification meeting held at Springfield, Ill., on the 8th inst., declared that he was for Tilden and Hendricks and Reform, and should labor from now until November next on the stump, through the press and through every conservative channel by which thought could reach thought for their election. His speech was received with great applause.

Robert Lincoln, only surviving son of the late President Lincoln, it is reported, will stump Illinois for the Democratic national ticket.

Gen. John F. Farnsworth, of Illinois, a prominent advocate of abolitionism in other days, and one of Mr. Greeley's most ardent supporters in 1872, has taken the stump for Tilden and Hendricks.

Charles Francis Adams and sons, it is said, are all for Tilden. The Boston Herald quotes him as saying: "Mr. Tilden is a formidable candidate, especially on a hard money platform.—With Mr. Tilden and his platform the Democratic party stand better, morally, before the people than does the Republican party. Hayes is nothing; respectable, no doubt but without any record as a reformer. Tilden is in himself a platform. He has made himself a record. Of the two, very decidedly I would infinitely prefer to see Mr. Tilden in the Executive Chair."

It seems to be taken for granted that Hayes is a hard money champion, and yet this is the platform on which he was elected Governor of Ohio in 1875: "Resolved, That a policy of finance should be pursued which, without unnecessary shock to business or trade, will ultimately equalize the purchasing capacity of the coin and paper dollar."

Secretary Zachariah Chandler has been elected Chairman of the National Republican Executive Committee. It is apparently a triumph of Grant over Hayes.

Outside of Carl Schurz, the German leaders and the German masses are overwhelmingly for Tilden and reform.

The New Haven Register says: "We have seen no telegram of condolence addressed from the White House to the family of Gen. Custer, nor has any official order been issued, recognizing the gallantry and heroism of the General and the men who followed him into the jaws of death. But we have noticed the advancement of Col. Fred from a second to a first lieutenancy, by reason of vacancies created on the bloody battle field in question."

Since the days of Jackson, the New Haven Register declares, no nomination has met with such acceptance in Connecticut, as that of Tilden, and he will carry that State by at least 9,000 majority.

In answer to a call from the Federal Senate, the Treasury Department sent to the Senate a list of the public defaulters, and the amount stolen. It appears that about one hundred million of the people's money has been stolen by the Radical officeholders!!! The Radical majority in the Senate refused to publish this list!!! So the people must wait a few days to get the official information. One hundred millions of dollars of the people's money stolen by the Radical party!!!—Freehold Democrat.

It seems that the "one term" pledge is an old dodge with Hayes. An Ohio paper recalls the fact that when he was first nominated for Governor he said he would not accept a second term, but when the time for a second came he—why he changed his mind! In Ohio it is considered a good joke that he should try the same dodge for the Presidency.

The Northampton (Mass.) Journal, heretofore a strong Republican organ, comes out squarely and enthusiastically for the Democratic national ticket.

The Buffalo Express (Republican) declares that Grantism was not indorsed at Cincinnati; it was only the honorable work of the Administration that was approved, not the dishonorable part. This is splitting hairs and drawing too fine a line for public comprehension.

The New Haven Register says that there is but one soft-money party in the country, and that is the Republican party. It gave us the irredeemable paper currency, and called it the best currency ever devised by man. Now it pretends to think otherwise, but it is all a pretense.

McKee, Avery, McDonald, Babcock and Joyce, of the Whiskey Ring, are enthusiastic in support of Hayes.

Less than two years ago Samuel J. Tilden was elected Governor of New York. It was the year after the panic. The people felt poor, and they demanded a reduction in the expenses of the Government. The taxes for 1874 were $16,000,000. The taxes for 1876 are $8,000,000. There is no humbug, no sham, no false pretenses about that. It is one of those solid, substantial facts which touch the pocket and influence the judgment of every citizen of every community in the State, for every man is a taxpayer.—Utica Observer.

It is said that when Carl Schurz read the address of the Fifth Avenue Conference he dwelt with emphasis on the following passage, and said, "This describes Hayes": "We shall support no candidate who, however favorably judged by his nearest friends, is not publicly known to possess those qualities of mind and character which the stern task of genuine reform requires. The American people cannot now afford to risk the future of the republic in experiments on merely supposed virtue or rumored ability to be trusted on the strength of private recommendations." And yet Schurz now supports Hayes.

It is not unlikely that Florida will go for Tilden and Hendricks. Under the stimulus of the St. Louis ticket and very liberal and popular State nominations, the Democrats are holding mass meetings and barbecues, and running railways trains to carry the crowd—and what is notable, large numbers of the negro voters are joining them.—Colored Democratic clubs are organizing in different parts of the State.

A wooden nutmeg, once by chance,
Became a bright and glittering jewel;
A soldier put it in his pants,
Remarking, "I did always do well."
The jewel grew in weight and worth,
And polished every day its raw phiz;
But O, that soldier's mental girth!
He lost it in a big post office.

NEWS ITEMS.

The interest of Z. K. Pangborn in the Jersey City Evening Journal is advertised for sale by the United States Marshal. Pangborn was one of those heroes of the day, who served as a paymaster for a short time. His accounts failed to balance by $7,944.51, and he refused to refund. Now, we suppose Pangborn, who has always been a bag of wind, will tell what he knows about Grant.—Elizabeth Monitor.

Haywood Grant was hanged Friday last at Rome, Ga., for arson. He confessed that he had murdered four men, one of them the Confederate General Hindman, who was assassinated at Helena, Ark., a few years ago.

Probably the oldest twins in the country are Messrs. John and Michael Stephens, who live in Platteville, Wis. They are more than seventy-nine years old, and are so strong and healthy that they will probably live many years longer.

General Custer, with five of his officers, were insured in the New York Life Insurance Company, of New York city, as follows: General Custer, $5,000; Captain Yates, $5,000; Captain Keogh, $10,000; Lieutenant Calhoun, $5,000; Lieutenant Crittenden, $10,000, and Lieutenant Porter, $5,000, in all $40,000.

As these insurances were effected under a special provision made by the Company for the benefit of army officers, there will be no trouble about a prompt settlement of the claims, notwithstanding they were killed in battle with Indians.

The American People.

No people in the world suffer as much with Dyspepsia as Americans. Although years of experience in medicine has failed to accomplish a certain and sure remedy for this disease and its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Heart-burn, Water-brash, Sick Headache, Costiveness palpitation of the Heart, Liver Complaint, coming up of the food, low spirits, general debility, etc., yet since the introduction of GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER we believe there is no case of Dyspepsia that cannot be immediately relieved. 30,000 dozen sold last year without one case of failure being reported. Go to your Druggist Wm. H. Voorhees and get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you. Regular size 75 cents.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap is a positive inspiration. It was a happy thought to combine the remedy, which of all others is beneficial in the majority of cutaneous diseases, with a pleasant and pure soap, by means of which it can be brought in contact with affected parts. Sold everywhere.

The Way "to minister to a mind diseased" is to take Peruvian Syrup, a protected solution of the protoxide of iron, which gives strength and vigor to the whole system, restores the digestive organs to perfect health, thereby restoring the mind to its natural vigor.

Mr. Robert E. Searle is the most exten- ve dealer in poultry, eggs, etc., in this unty, and his reputation for furnishing one but fresh and first class merchandise his line is such that his time is occupied ay and evening to fill orders. One feature f his business is that he will deliver to cus- mers, poultry already dressed and trussed, ady for cooking on delivery. Parties de- ring a nice tender spring chicken, or fresh id eggs will do well to patronize Mr. Searle, hose advertisement and address appears in nother column.

Quoit pitching is now the popular game mong the gentlemen in this section. On Vednesday last, a social party of some wenty-five of our well known citizens eld a quoit pitching picnic in the beautiful rove along the brook, near I. D. Ten Eyck's residence, Evona, and to say that all njoyed themselves would be but to reiterate he expression from all concerned at the onclusion of the afternoon's sport. We ish the new firm success in their enter- rise. They propose conducting the busi- ess on a sound and respectable basis, both entlemen having considerable experience n the same.

Plainfield is to be delighted with one of hose delightful Summer Night's Concert, uch as all New York have been enjoying or the past few weeks. Only we must say hat the one to be given here surpasses in randeur any we have heard of in our sister ity. Surely, the array of talent is enough o draw a house larger than our city hall f, and the attractions are truly wonderful. With Salvotti, Morgan, Dauphin, Gates, Florio, Kinross and others, we advise our friends to secure their seats now. The church will be ventilated during the day, and in the evening delightfully perfumed by Wenck, the celebrated perfumer, N. Y. See advertisement.

Appointment.

Mr. Wm. M. Jennings on Monday last received his commission as an agent of the "New Jersey Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals" in this city. Mr. Jennings will do his duty though he gains no friends by doing so. The appointment is a good one. Inhuman drivers will take notice of the appointment.

Mr. Caryl Florio, the eminent Pianist, at the Summer Night's Concert, Monday evening.

Trotting.

The best trot of the season will take place on the Driving Park grounds, next Wednesday. Five well known horses are entered and the drivers mean business. The entries are as follows:

Peter Osborn,	enters	g. m.	Lady Blanche
L. DeCamp	"	b. g.	Duke
Gid. Smalley,	"	blk. m.	———
Wm. Bryer,	"	blk. g.	Uncle John
C. M. Fink,	"	b. m.	Belle A.

The entrance to the track is 50 cents. The "Club House" adjacent offers excellent accommodations. Pools will be sold at the "Cosmopolitan Billiard Rooms," Front St., Tuesday evening.

Madame Salvotti sings "Hear ye Israel" Monday evening.

Grand Centennial Picnic.

The Fifth Annual Picnic of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society will take place in Vail's Grove, Thursday, August 3. The Committee of Arrangements promise that this picnic shall eclipse all former efforts. Fine music has been engaged for the occasion, under Quans. There will be swings and refreshments on the grounds. The Society will appear in regalia in a Grand March immediately after intermission, about 7 o'clock p. m. Stages will run from the corner of 4th and Liberty Streets to and from the Grove during the day and evening. Fare ten cents. Admission to the grounds 25 cents.

Firemens' Picnic.

The members of "Plainfield Engine Company, No. 2" will hold their Second Annual Picnic in College Grove, near the Park House, next Thursday, July 27th. The occasion promises to be one of universal enjoyment, judging from the arrangements being made. Our firemen are noted for doing things not by halves, but in a thorough manner, and those who patronize the Picnic next Thursday will find that No. 2's boys are no exception to the rule. Frazee will furnish excellent music, as usual, for the occasion, which in itself is sufficient inducement to draw a crowd to the grounds.

The New C. R. R. Ferry.

The new ferry from Communipaw to Clarkson street, New York, commenced running Monday last. Only one boat was put on the line and that was run on the even hours in connection with the trains. The ferry-boat Elizabeth, formerly on the Liberty Street line, was the one placed on the new line, and she left the Jersey side at 6:13, A. M., making the trip in fifteen minutes. The average number of passengers carried was about fifty on each trip during the day. The company is building for use on this line a boat to be called the Fanwood, which will be the finest one on the North River. It will cost $125,000, and is 225 feet over all, 36 feet beam, and 13 feet depth of hold, and built on the same plan as the rest of the Company's boat. This ferry makes nine now running to Jersey City.

A Question of Right.

Considerable excitement is beginning to be manifest among certain of our citizens regarding the right of ownership to the beautiful grove adjacent to the Park House, it being claimed by certain parties that the Grove belongs to the City of Plainfield, as an original owner so gave it and recorded a deed to that effect in the Essex County Clerk's Office. As near as we can gather the circumstances of the case are as follows: Some 21 years ago, Thomas B. Stillman, Clark Rogers and Nathan Rogers bought a farm on the outskirts of the then town of Plainfield, and laid the same out in lots with streets running through the land. On the plot was a beautiful grove, which Mr. Stillman marked as a "Park," on the map, and the deed and map were recorded in the County Clerk's office at Newark, the County being called Essex at that time. Subsequently the property was conveyed by deed to E. Dean Dow, Esq., who erected the "Ophelleton Seminary" for Young Ladies on a part of it, with the disputed grove immediately in the rear. This was afterward known as "Dow's Grove" and was used for private purposes, and no thought was entertained by the purchaser other than that the grove was his private property, although it is said that parties purchasing property in the immediate vicinity, did so with the understanding that this grove would eventually be used as a public park. Some months since a company of gentlemen of Plainfield purchased the remaining portion of the original tract laid out, including this grove, and subsequently sold the grove to a gentleman from Trenton for $10,000. Parties interested in the vicinity immediately took steps to lay the matter before the Common Council, asking their interference in the matter of claiming the property as belonging to the City of Plainfield. Corporation Counsel Marsen was instructed at last meeting of Council to investigate the matter, which he is doing. We learn that Mr. Marsen has searched the records of Essex County and is satisfied that he has found documents proving conclusively that the property belongs by right to the City of Plainfield. Should this prove true, Plainfield will gain something long needed—a Public Park. In our next issue we hope to give further light on the subject.

Personalia.

We return thanks to friend Amos Vail for a basket of delicious Lawton blackberries, grown on his father's farm, Green Brook. Messrs. Clifton & Vail, Cherry Street, have these berries for sale. No better are to be found in the market.

We received a call from our worthy friend and former townsman, P. H. Brinthall, on Saturday. Mr. B. is now located at Somerville, and is busy getting in his crops, but is never too busy to see his friends who call upon him.

Geo. W. Breen, brother to Capt. of Police Breen, is spending a few days in our city, having come East on a visit from his present place of location, Paola, Kansas, where he is farming it.

Mr. Morgan Taylor and wife, of this city, are sojourning at Asbury Park.

We understand that our newly married friend, Mr. S. St. J. McCutchen and his worthy spouse, intend spending the month of August among the Catskills.

Mr. Cooley and wife, of North Plainfield, are at Asbury Park enjoying the salt water and cool atmosphere.

Many of our people are leaving Plainfield for the White Mountains. Why don't they try the Washington Rock House, and give Bro. Staats a chance to take dull care away from them.

Rev. Dr. Smith assisted in the laying of the corner stone of the New First Congregational Church at Bound Brook last Monday.

Mr. All. Foote, the gentlemanly clerk of the City Hotel, is spending a few weeks at Watkin's Glen, New York State.

It is with regret that we learn of the resignation of Councilman Hunter. He made a good city official, and we trust that his place may be filled by as efficient a successor.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation from Mr. John A. Staats to be present at private theatricals at the Washington Rock House, this (Thursday) evening. Circumstances, however, prevent our being present as we would desire.

Post Office Matters.

How often is it asked at the Post Office window. "Is there a letter here for me?" and upon a negative answer being returned, the visitor will turn away disappointed, remarking that there must be a letter there for them for there is one expected, laying all the blame to the post office clerk, who is accused of being too lazy to look for the letter. Now the fact that a letter was started for this place to the address of the enquirer at the post office window, and its non-arrival here, is, nine cases out of ten, attributable to the fact that the letter is mis-directed. We were shown the other day a letter from the Postmaster of Plainfield Centre, New York, to Postmaster Vail, Plainfield, N.J., as follows, which explains itself:

PLAINFIELD, CENTRE, N. Y., July 14th, 1876.
P. M., Plainfield, N. J.

Yours of the 12th is received and I will forward with next mail the five letters inquired for, and also give list of others on hand, that I think can belong there. It is singular that people will take pains to write New York in full when they mean New Jersey.

Yours,
HUGH E. WILLIAMS, P. M.,
Plainfield Centre, N. Y.
(late Spooners' Corners).

Miss. Medina Park House, (3) Mrs. C. C. Goodrich, Virginia DeMesa, (3), Miss Addie Tuller, John F. Plummer, William H. Sebring, Jr., J. H. Reimer, care of A. H. Winans, J. V. Searing, Miss Annie Johnson, care of Mr. Fraley, Annie Shea, care of J. F. Plummer, S. J. Barr, Esq., Mrs. Cornell, care of F. Schriber, J. W. Gale, F. Casey, Staats Bros., Washington Rock, Mrs. Thompson, care of J. H. Whitney, Wm. F. Adams, Charles Ulrich, Walter Godwin, care of J.J. Perine.

The cares and duties of a post office clerk are not easy ones, and careless people by misdirecting their letters do not help or assist them in the discharge of their duties, but on the contrary cause a great deal of trouble.

Mr. Joseph Dauphin, the celebrated California Basso, sings Monday evening.

Tilden & Hendricks Club.

A "Young Men's Tilden & Hendricks Reform Club" was formed in this city on Monday evening last, and the following gentlemen were elected officers:

President—John H. Jackson.
Vice Pres.—Dr. G. L. Frederick, Hugh M. Gilligan, Dr. W. W. Gamble.
Rec. Sec.—D. Brown Barber.
Cor. Sec.—Walter L. Hetfield.
Treas.—John Vetterlein.
Ser. at Arms.—James L. Marshall.

Mr. Jackson on being installed as President, delivered a very enthusiastic and effective speech, denouncing the present administration, the fraud and corruption which has prevailed during the past eight years. He said that Mr. Hayes had already endorsed the administration by taking his place on the Cincinnati platform. He closed by saying that with the thorough practical reformer, Samuel J. Tilden, at the head of the ticket, will ensure us a precedent unequaled in this country.

Meeting of the Club for the present will be held in the rooms over Vetterlein's hardware store, on Front street, on Monday evening of each week, at 8 o'clock. All *friends of the great reform movement inau*gurated at St. Louis, are invited to attend.

The forming of this club is a move in the right direction and evidences that our young men intend to take a hand in the approaching election, and show, that by organization, the majority of our opponents can be reduced in Plainfield. The newly organized club is composed of some of our best young men, every member a voter, either by residence or age. We hope that every lover of free government and Reform will help swell its ranks, so that ere election day comes the Democracy of Plainfield may show a front that will astonish our adversaries and prove to the balance of the county that Plainfield is not entirely lost to the party of Reform.

Base Ball.

A match game of ball was played on the old Circus Grounds last Friday afternoon, between the "Centennials" of Mt. Clare, and the "Amity's" of this city, resulting in a victory for the latter club by a score of 16 to 11.

An interesting game of base ball, between the Staten Island Club, of Brooklyn, and the Crescents, of this city, was witnessed last Wednesday by a large number of spectators, many of whom were ladies. The game was played on the grounds of the Crescents, which are bounded by 8th and 9th Streets and Central and Madison Ave*nues, and occupied one hour and fifty-five* minutes, the score at the termination of the 9th innings standing 17 to 14 in favor of the visitors. The Staten Island Club is among the foremost Amateur Clubs in the country, and a defeat at their hands is more desirable than a victory over many less formidable antagonists. The Crescents are not a new organization. They are composed of about 25 of our leading young men, the majority of them graduates of Colleges, and the object of the Club is simply recreation and exercise. Of the present playing nine, 7 men are Collegiates. Of these Yale claims 2; Rutgers, 2; Princeton, 2, and Williams, 1, and of course they bring into their game all the ardor which distinguishes the playing in their respective Colleges.

A temporary suspension of the game was occasioned by an unforseen and lamentable accident to the Helpmate of one of our subscribers. She was passing in her carriage along 9th Street, in the rear of the ground and near the batters, when she was struck in the side, very forcibly, by the ball and for a few moments very much prostrated. In a short time, however, she rallied sufficiently to proceed homeward and at last accounts was recovering. The only other accident worthy of record was a dislocation of the thumb sustained by one of the Staten Island men, who nearly fainted with the attending pain.

A game will be played on Saturday afternoon next on the same grounds, between the Crescents and a club from New York.—All are invited especially the ladies, for whom seats are provided, and as the best of order prevails, many of the fair sex take these occasions to encourage the young men in their efforts to achieve success, and thereby add very much to the brilliancy of the scene.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Last Friday night, about 7 o'clock, as Miss Cornelia Quinn, a young lady residing in Park Street, was returning home after an evening walk, in passing a little grove near the road, a villain jumped over the fence and coming behind her and seizing her threw the contents of a bottle containing red pepper, chloroform and ammonia in her face.—This taking her breath she was seized by the throat and dragged to the wood. Recovering herself she struggled to get free, and struck the villain a sound blow in the face and endeavored to pull off the mask that concealed it. In this she was successful, when the villain drew a knife and threatened her life if she made any outcry. Still undismayed she broke from him and ran in great fright to the village. After she was taken home Dr. Stryker was summoned and found her suffering from great nervous prostration and some severe bruises of a dangerous character. The outrageous and cowardly assailant was a well dressed and fine appearing person, and had been seen hanging around her house for several days. It is hoped he will soon be arrested.

We regret to learn of the sickness of Otis G. Webb, editor of the Townsman. We trust soon to see him about again.

Ernest C. Webb has withdrawn his connection with the Townsman, on account of other business occupying his attention.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

Messrs. Hoxsie & Wadley have commenced digging another well on Johnston's Drive, a short distance from the site of the one filled up last week, on grounds owned by J. Taylor Johnston, Esq. Plenty of water will be procured here, and the work of macadamized facilitated by its use. Mr. Johnston gives the firm permission to sink the well.

Boys robbed a bird's nest in a small tree in front of the residence of Mr. Sanders, on Duer Street a few nights since. They attempted to rob the nest twice during the day but were frustrated by Mrs. S., who ordered them away. During the night however, they returned and accomplished their design, breaking the limbs of the small tree in which the nest was built to such an extent that the tree must die. Undoubtedly the act of the boys was perpetrated under a promise of reward from some party who desires to secure a collection of eggs as a curiosity. Such a one should be shown up before the public.

Mr. Joseph Staats is lying dangerously ill of pneumonia at his residence corner of Duer and Emily Streets.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Pic-nic parties will remember that cool and inviting grounds may be obtained of Mr. Fender at Feltville, N. J., who will do all in his power to accommodate pic-nic parties and make it pleasant for them.

Another stork was shot near this village one day last week by Mr. Alfred Wilson.

Mr. W. H. Kinross, the fine Baritone, at Summer Night's Concert, Monday evening.

A Swindler.

An adventurer tried to victimize one of our citizens on Saturday last, but failed to connect in his little scheme. The circumstances are as follows: Last Wednesday a young and well-dressed man was introduced to Mr. Chamberlain the hotel keeper of Rahway, on board of a local train from New York by the conductor, as Mr. A. B. Fausett, of the United States Hotel, who stated that he was in search of a good road horse which he was desirous of purchasing. Mr. Chamberlain knowing of several good horses in Rahway, invited Mr. Fausett to his hotel to stay over night and the next day took him out and showed him several animals, none of which seemed to suit. Mr. Daniel Hetfield was later introduced to him and also showed him some fine horses, but none seemed to please the buyer. Finally, Mr. Hetfield spoke of a fine horse owned by Mr. Chris. Van Arsdale, of the City Hotel, this city, ("Lucy") and the stranger at once proposed visiting here. As the man was of good address and told so plausible a story of his recent connection with the United States Hotel at Trenton, freely giving out cards of that house with his given name on them, Mr. Hetfield acceded and brought him to Plainfield on Friday. Previous to starting, however, the gentleman bargained for a new sulky at the factory of Messrs. Hetfield & Jackson, saying he would take it upon his return from Plainfield and pay the cash for it. Upon their arrival here, and being shown Mr. V.'s mare "Lucy", Mr. Fausett immediately pronounced her the very animal he was in search of, and soon closed a bargain, giving Mr. V. a check on a Philadelphia bank, which was to be cashed by him when the mare was delivered at Rahway the next morning. He was introduced to several gentlemen in this city, and played the part of a "hale fellow well met," and finally, in company with Mr. Hetfield and others, visited Campbell's Club House on Park Avenue, where his recent purchase was driven around the track for his benefit and to his perfect satisfaction. Finally, he proposed to trade the sulky he bargained for at Rahway for a buggy owned by Mr. Campbell, making the deal by Mr. C. paying him a difference of $5, both parties agreeing to come and go after their respective vehicles. Before starting again for Rahway, the young man urged upon Mr. Hetfield to take the mare "Lucy" with them that night, saying that he could cash the check then as he had $1,000 in bank there. Dan, however, did not feel like leading a horse behind him at that time, and if Mr. Van Arsdale had been consulted he never would have let the mare gone under those circumstances. Finally they departed, and the next morning Mr. N. took the animal to Rahway to deliver her to her purchaser. But here a difficulty arose, as upon his arrival and inquiry for Mr. F. it was found that that gentleman was non est, although he had breakfasted at Chamberlain's hotel in the early morning. Soon the parties interested began to "smell a mice," and a telegram was sent to the United States Hotel at Trenton, to know if Mr. Fausett was home, and an answer was received that he was. Another telegram was then sent enquiring if that gentleman had been in Rahway the past day or two, and an answer received that Mr. F. had not been in Rahway in 5 years. A telegram was then sent to the bank at Philadelphia, asking if the drawer and endorser of the check had any money there, and an answer received that they knew of no such person. This at once proved the recent friend (?) an adventurer, who by this time had got beyond the reach of Jersey justice. Dan swore some and the mare was brought back to Mr. V.'s stables in this city. The result of the quondam Mr. Fausett's adventure may be summed up as follows: Five dollars in by his trade with Mr. Campbell, $5 borrowed from Mr. Hetfield, and a good time among the boys generally. The fraud was a short, thick-set young man about 35 years of age, smooth face and dressed in a suit of light cassimere. If Dan Hetfield ever gets sight of him, we should like to be around to hear the small talk. Mr. Van Arsdale has the check in his possession yet, and says "Lucy" is for sale at a fair price.

P. S.—Since the above was in type we learn that the adventurer has been arrested at Milford, N. J., through the exertions of Messrs. Willis & Fausett, of the United States Hotel, Trenton. His name proves to be Charles W. Atkinson, of Doylestown, Pa. He has before been apprehended for his swindling operations. This time he will probably get a taste of Jersey justice.

PROCEEDINGS COMMON COUNCIL.

Thursday Ev'g, July 13, 1876.

Met pursuant to adjournment.

Pres. Mr. Smith in chair.

Minutes of meetings of June 5th and 12th read and approved.

Mr. French presented Com'n of W. A. Woodruff in reference to an alleged nuisance near his residence on 2d St., above Peace. Referred to Com. on Sts. and Pub. Health.

Mr. Brown presented Com'n from Messrs. Jas. Martine, Isaac L. Miller, Wm. Streim and others, residents and property owners in the city of Plainfield, in reference to the belief that it is the intention of certain party or parties to devote that plot of land lying in the city of Plainfield and bounded by 8th St., College Place, 9th and Union Sts., to building purposes, thereby depriving the citizens of this city of the use of the same as a park, as has been their wont. Your petitioners further represent that the original owners of said plot caused to be made a map embracing a tract of land upon which the above described plot is represented as a Park; and further, that repeated conveyances of property has been made according to said map, your petitioners claim said map to have been filed in Essex Co., and that to all intents and purposes, both by declaration of the makers of said map as well as by representation and use, the above mentioned plot is a park. Being well satisfied as to the above facts, your petitioners most honorably pray that your Hon. Body will take such steps as will secure to our citizens the free and uninterrupted use of said plot for the purposes of a Park. Referred to Com. on Laws and Ords., with instructions to consult with the Corporation Counsel.

Mr. Brown presented Com'n from City Assessor, J. A. Hubbard, stating he has made the assessments for year 1876, in conformity to law raising the sum of $15,000 for city and the further sum of $3,500 for poor, and passed the duplicate book to the Collector of Taxes, Lewis E. Clark, on Friday, June 30th, as the charter provides, and that said book is now in the hands of the City Collector, and subject to your examination and approval. Received and ordered filed.

Mr. French presented petition of Patrick Day to sell spirituous and fermented liquors in the place whereat he now resides. On motion referred to the Com. on License.

Mr. French presented Com'n from E. W. Runyon in reference to judgment of E. E. Miller and others, vs. the City of Plainfield. Referred to Com. on Laws and Ords.

Mr. Mulford presented Com'n from Geo. P. Snyder, transmitting in various New St. Sewer cases, amounting to $49.25. Referred to Com. on Laws and Ords.

The following claims were presented:

D. Hand, board, $51 42; E. V. Shotwell, do., $5; J. M. Schork, do., $423; M. B. Long, medical attendance on poor, $3 50; Mary Brewer, services as nurse, $9; A. M. Runyon, coffins, &c., for poor, $43; O. W. Rockfellow, agent, groceries, $51 50; Thos. Terrill, $6 50; M. Bird, coal, &c., $6; Sc., rent, station house, $150; Patrick Muldoon, rent, $18; R. Hagaman, $56; O. Runyon, burying poor, &c., $11 50.

On motion, these claims were referred to the Com. on Alms.

N. Y. Globe Gas Light Co., $283 50; Plainfield Gas Light Co., $627 20; Berry & Thorn, repairs to St. Lamps, &c.

On motion, referred to Com. on Fire, Water and Lamps.

Mr. Brown presented report of Capt. of Police for month of June: Number of arrests, 19; number of tramps furnished with lodging during the month, 212, an average of about 7 per night. On motion, received and ordered filed.

Com's from His Honor the Mayor withdrawing the name of Patrick Waters for regular policeman, and nominating William Hedden to the Council for confirmation as regular policeman, Waters having declined to serve further on the police force. Also, calling attention to the urgent necessity of some change in the Health ord., so that the Board of Health may be able to abate nuisances; he was glad to learn, however, that an ord. pointing in that direction was under consideration, and urged its prompt adoption. Received and ordered filed.

A report of the Treas., from April 1st, 1876, to July 11th, 1876 read, and on motion, ordered filed.

WISTAR'S BALSAM WILD CHERRY

Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Croup, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Liver Complaint, Pains or Soreness in the Chest or Side, Bleeding at the Lungs, and every affection of the Throat, Lungs and Chest, are speedily and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry which does not dry up a cough and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most remedies, but loosens it, cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

Consumption Can be Cured

by a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials it has received. [illegible] SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. Sold by druggists generally.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE EMBARRASSED MAN.

He spoke in oily tones to the saloon-keeper, praising his establishment, his personal looks, his dog and his cat, and then said he guessed he'd take a little peach-brandy and pay for it as he came along back. The saloon-keeper guessed he wouldn't, and that's why Sylvanus Hope broke a window. A policeman gathered up the slack of his vest as he turned the corner, and as soon thereafter as the rules of locomotion would permit Mr. Hope was seated in a comfortable cell.

"Thought you'd like some peach-brandy, eh?" remarked his Honor, as the prisoner stood at the railing.

"Wait a few minutes," said Mr. Hope. "I'm kinder embarrassed like and don't know what to say."

"You weren't much embarrassed when you broke that window, were you?"

"Sorter, and sorter not. I kinder tremble all over just now."

"That will all pass away as soon as you get to chair-making," remarked the court.

"I can't make chairs—never could handle tools worth a cent," replied the victim, in a husky voice. "I like to see chairs sitting around as well as any one, but I can't make 'em. If you want to send me anywhere, send me to a festival or an excursion."

"Three months," said the court.

"That'll take me to all of 'em," remarked Mr. Hope.

"Don't make any mistake, prisoner Hope, and don't lay any flattering unctions to your soul. Excursions will be given to Toledo on Sundays, and you won't be on the boat to get your eyes pounded up. Excursions will go up the river to St. Clair, and down the river to Erie, but you won't be along to criticise the scenery or throw lumps of coal at the merry dolphins around Fighting Island. You are going up to headquarters, where ice cream is a fleeting shadow, and where lemonade is all water and bar soap and no lemon.—Walk into the cool corridor, Mr. Hope, there to contemplate the crayon sketches on the marble walls until you hear the rattle of our laundry carriage."

The prisoner repeated that he was very much embarrassed, and he hung to the railing until he realized that his coat-collar was on the high road to destruction.

HIS PROTEST.

Moses Green made his bed on a vacant lot at the foot of a telegraph pole.—Green was the grass around him—dry and wiry was the voice of the officer who found him sleeping sweetly and with marked vigor.

There is a sad rhyme in connection
With the story of lost Lenore,
But that rhyme was simply dejection
Compared to the drunken man's snore.

He rose up with alacrity, after the officer had drawn him around a while by the leg, and in his wild thirst to cripple somebody for life he kicked the telegraph pole until most of his toes were meat for dogs. He limped horribly, as Bijah turned him out, but his voice was all right. In a bass as deep as the roar of a lion, he said:

"Sir, in the name of forty-two million American people, I protest against what you are about to do."

"What is it?" softly inquired the court.

"You intend, sir, to incarcerate me in a dungeon strong for the period of six months, and I forcibly and logically protest against it."

"You are wrong," replied his Honor, "I only meant to send you for three."

"Six or three, I protest, and I want my protestation put on file."

"You didn't protest against getting drunk, I observe," put in the court.

"I acknowledge that I was drunk, sir, but I defy you or any other man with a calico shirt collar to show me a law making the offence of drunkenness punishable by fine or imprisonment.—Understand, sir, I protest, and I want that protestation filed."

"You are talking a good deal," said the court; "I believe that at least a third of your drunkenness still sticks to you."

"That's nothing to do with the case," replied Moses, grandly waving his arm. "I demand that my protest be filed before any further proceedings are taken."

"What you seem to demand more than anything else is four months in the House of Correction, and you can consider that you have got it."

"File my protest," commanded the prisoner, raising his voice three notes higher.

He made a beautiful procession as Bijah walked him into the corridor, and seated him on the sky-blue mop-pail, and he wasn't over three seconds passing a given point. He had his revenge after all. He took the screw out of the head of the mop-stick, cut the broom-handle in two, jammed out the bottom of a pail, and filled Bijah's palm-leaf hat with ashes and soft coal.

GOOD ADVICE.

"Henry Davidson," began the Court, as the last man walked out, "you should know that yelling for a Presidential candidate won't elect him."

"I do know it."

"Then why were you holding to a lamp-post last night and screaming, 'Haw for Hayes!'"

"First time I've been sprung in a year," whispered the prisoner.

"Well, you go home, and keep your teeth together. One vote is worth more than a thousand bellows, and politics were yelled to death four years ago."

Then the Court carefully locked up his blotting-pad, slipped into his hat, and Bijah began shoving the chair-legs against the loafers' backs to clear the room.—Detroit Free Press.

CAUTION!

The undersigned would caution the public against using or sinking driven wells under Nelson W. Green's patent, unless the same are put down by him, as all parties using the same otherwise put down, or sinking such wells will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, he having the exclusive right to sink driven wells in Plainfield. The following is a decision recently rendered by Judge Benedict, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Mr. D. Andrews, owner of a patent granted to Col. Nelson W. Green for a driven well, [illegible] from the use of the patent in the manufacture of a similar well. The testimony filled over one thousand pages and counsel were over two [illegible] in summing before Judge Benedict in Brooklyn. The patent is worth a million dollars. The well is an air-tight iron tube, driven into the ground until it reaches free-running water. An air pump is screwed on the top of the tube, and the other end is of steel, made sharp and perforated. Many thousands of the wells are in use. [illegible] Judge Benedict held that the idea of raising water from the earth into a well pit by artificial means was new, but was not patentable, but that the method by which the idea is made available was patentable. He decided that the infringement had been clearly proved.

RARITAN, NEW JERSEY,
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of a [illegible] which [illegible] to the durability, [illegible] elasticity, [illegible] strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

DURABLE & DURABLE
TRADE MARK

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, as these leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint the unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either inside or outside work, or boat painting than any other Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use,
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.
Liberal Inducements to Dealers.
And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.
Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price List and Sample Color Card, Address,

LEGAL NOTICES.

SHERIFF'S SALE.—Union County Circuit Court. John Bosko, vs. Nicholas Glaser and Israel Lewis. In case. Fi. fa.

By virtue of the above-stated writ of fieri facias to me directed, I shall expose for sale at public vendue, at the Court House, in the city of Elizabeth, N. J., on Wednesday, the 16th day of August A. D., 1876, at two o'clock p. m. of said day, all the following described land and premises, situate, lying and being in the city of Plainfield, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey:

The First Tract—Beginning at a point in the southeasterly line of Milton Place, and corner of lot number (30), as shown on a certain map of J. Raymond's property, on file in the Union County Clerk's office, in Block B; thence running in a southeasterly course fifty feet to a stake and corner of the Davis lot; thence running along that lot in a southwesterly course, two hundred and twenty five feet, more or less, to a stake in the line of Mulford Cole's land; thence running in a northwesterly course along his line eighty and five tenths feet to the southeasterly line of Milton place; thence along the line of the same in a northeasterly course two hundred and twenty-five feet, more or less, to the place of beginning—together with the land in front of the same, to the centre of Milton place, to be used as a public street.

The Second Tract—Being known as lots (62 and 63) sixty-two and sixty-three, on block one (1), on the Wooden Place, as per map of said Stiger; each lot being twenty-five feet front and rear by about one hundred feet deep, bounded as follows:

Beginning at a stake in the west side of Lake avenue, being a corner of lot sold to M. Gosser, No. 61; thence westerly about one hundred feet to Manning Stelle's line; thence northerly with his line fifty feet (50) feet to a stake; thence southerly parallel with first line, and at right angles with Lake avenue, about one hundred feet, more or less, to the west edge of Lake avenue; thence with Lake avenue southerly fifty (50) feet to the place of beginning.

NOBODY!

Left there, nobody's daughter,
Child of disgrace and shame—
Nobody ever taught her
A mother's sweet, saving name.

Nobody ever caring
Whether she stood or fell,
And men (are they men?) ensnaring
With the arts and gold of hell!

Stitching with ceaseless labor
To earn her pitiful bread;
Begging a crust of a neighbor,
And getting a curse instead.

All through the long, hot summer,
All through the cold, dark time,
With fingers that numb and number
Grow white as the frost's white rime.

Nobody ever conceiving
The throe of that warm, young life;
Nobody ever believing
The strain of that terrible strife!

Nobody kind words pouring
In that orphan heart's sad ear;
But all of us ignoring
What lies at our doors, so near!

O sister! down in the alley,
Pale, with the downcast eye,
Dark and drear is the valley,
But the stars shine forth on high.

Nobody here may love thee,
Or care if thou stand or fall;
But the great, good God above thee,
He watches and cares for all.

MANY YEARS AGO.

By the lake beyond the meadow,
Where the lilies blow,
As the young moon dipt and lifted
Her reflected bow,
Lived and died a dream of beauty,
Many years ago.

Something made the milk-white blossoms
Even whiter grow;
Something gave the dying sunset
An intenser glow,
And enriched the cup of pleasure,
Filled to overflow.

Hope was frail and passion fleeting;
It is often so;
Visions born of golden sunsets
With the sunsets go;
To have loved is to have suffered
Martyrdom below.

By the lake beyond the meadow,
Where the lilies blow,
O, the glory there that perished
None shall ever know,
When a human heart was broken,
Many years ago.

WAITING FOR AN ANSWER.

BY GEO. MANVILLE FENN.

My story? my life? O, it has been so uneventful, too simple in its incidents. I I could tell you the sorrows of others, but my own—well, well! as you will. You shall hear. The wound had never healed, and if I put my hand above it, the place still throbs, even as it will beat and ache till kindly nature says to me, "Sleep, poor weary one, and rest." And then peacefully, trustingly, and with a simple hope of forgiveness, may I sleep that long sleep which they say so flippantly has no waking; but which has a waking, as every lesson which we learn in life persists in teaching us.

You will smile, perhaps, when I tell you that I was once what people called pretty—that this pale-hued face was once plump and rosy, these sad eyes bright, and this gray scant hair golden-brown, long and flowing. But why should I think you would smile? Do I not know that you must have seen the gay young plant putting out its tender leaves in spring, growing green and luxuriant of foliage in summer, ripe and ruddy in autumn, and gray, bent and withered in age? And should I be pitied because I had followed in the way of nature? Surely not. It is not for that I ask your sympathy, but for the blight that fell upon the young plant, and seared and scathed it so that it seemed for months as if it would die; but it lived, as I have lived to tell you this.

Do you know that wonderous feeling which comes in the early year, and that strange sense of keen delight, that elasticity of spirit, when, full of youth and hope, the very tears of joyous sensibility start to the eyes as you wander amidst the trees and flowers in spring? I remember how I felt, O! so well, even though it is now forty years ago, and I was twenty.

Jack and I were engaged. It was all such a simple, homely affair. We had known one another for years—the children of neighboring farmers. Jack—I still call him by the simple old pet name of those days—Jack had been away at a good school, and being bright and shrewd and clever, he had won his way on, taking to engineering instead of his father's farm life; and now it had come to this—that he had been staying at home for a month, previous to going out to a good appointment in Melbourne.

That month in spring, how it passed! We had met again and again, and in his honest, manly way he had asked me to be his wife.

"You know, Grace, that I have always loved you," he said; "and now I have hopes and prospects, it cannot be wrong to ask you for your promise."

We were walking by the river side as he said this, and how well I can picture it all—the soft, gliding water mirroring the trees on the opposite bank, the young green buds just breaking from their cases, and, above all, the soft, tender blue of the spring sky—the blue, he had told me, that was like my eyes.

"Do you want me to promise, Jack?" I said, simply as I looked up in his face.

"No, darling; I am satisfied, he cried, as his strong arms held me to his broad breast, and that was all. No oaths could have bound me more tightly to him. I felt that I was his wife when he should come to claim me.

We were late that evening, and entered the house shyly, for there had been so much to talk of and plan. In a month's time Jack was to sail for Melbourne; then he was to work very hard for three years, and come and fetch me to be his wife.

That month glided by, and the last day had come. It was, as I told you, spring-time—joyous spring-time, with the hawthorn's snowy blossoms, the apple trees pink, and the pear trees pearly with their pyramids of flowers. Every meadow I passed was starred with golden buttercups, and from every spray the birds trilled or jerked forth their merry songs of hope and love.

I could not feel sad, even though I was going to meet Jack for the last walk before he went away; but, as I said, mingled with the feeling of ecstacy there was a strange tearfulness of eye, and my breath would come at times with a sob.

He was by the stile, waiting for me—the stile down by the long meadow, half-way between the two farms—and as he took my hand in his, we neither of us spoke, but stood gazing away over the woodland and meadow, all clad in their wondrous beauty, and listened to the birds. Now it was the soft, tender coo of the stock-dove from the wood, now the jerked-out, twittering song of the linnets; then, soft and mellow, from the thick hedgerows, floated toward us the flute notes of the blackbird; while far on high trilled away the larks, singing one against the other to their mates, setting in tall grass of the golden meads.

We could not talk—our hearts were too full; for Jack was to be off at daybreak the next morning. But there was no need for words. We loved each other in the simple nature-taught way that has been since the world began, and we knew that every joyous song around that thrilled upon our ears meant love, and even in our sorrow we were happy.

"Only three years, darling," Jack whispered to me, "and then—"

The tears rose to my eyes, as I tried to answer him, but I could not speak a word.

"And you will let me find a long letter when I get there?" he said, tenderly.

"Yes, Jack, I promise," I said; and then it was time to return, for the hours had glided by, how we could not tell.

Jack spent the evening with us at home, and then he left us hurriedly, for our farewells had been said in the wood, and it was one hearty kiss, given and taken before the old people, and then good-by.

But I saw him pass soon after daybreak, and he saw me, and waved his hand, for I had sat by the window all night, lest I might let him go by, and I asleep.

And then time glided on sadly, but pleasantly as well. Mine was a busy life, for soon my father took to his bed, ill—a bed he never left again, for he gradually sank and died, leaving my poor mother in very indifferent circumstances.

It was a hard blow for us both, for he had been one of the kindest and truest of men, but while poor mother pined and waited, I had my hopeful days in view, and from time to time letters from dear Jack, all so true and honest, and full of trust in the future, that I felt as if I could not repine, even when greater troubles fell upon me.

For at the end of two years I was standing by the bedside where lay poor mother, sinking fast. She had no particular ailment, but had literally pined and wasted away. The bird had lost its mate of many years, and when at last she kissed me and said "Good-by," it seemed to me to be in a quiet, rest-seeking spirit, and she spoke like one looking hopefully forward to the meeting with him who had gone before.

But she could think of me even then, and almost the last whispered words were:

"Only eleven months, Grace, and then he will be back to fetch you."

Poor mother! she would not have passed so peacefully away if she had known that which I withheld—namely, the news that came to me from our lawyer. For, through the failure of the enterprise in which my father's savings had been invested, and which brought us a little income of sixty pounds a year, I was left penniless—so poor in fact that the furniture of the cottage in the little town, to which we had moved when we left the farm, had to be sold to defray the funeral expenses.

It was very hard to bear, and for a month was terribly depressed; but there was that great hopeful time ever drawing near—the end of the three years, when Jack would come to fetch me to be his wife.

It was now for the first time that I remember feeling particular about my personal appearance, and I studied my glass to see if Jack would find me looking careworn and thin, and my glass told me truly—yes.

But I had to be up and doing, and before another month was over, through the kindness of people whom we had known, I was placed where I could work contentedly for the bread I must earn till Jack should come to fetch me away.

It was at a large West-End dressmakers, and it was hard work to get used to the hurry and excitement of the place, where there were twelve girls living in the house; and as many more came every day.

There were all kinds of petty pieces of tyranny to submit to at first, and I suppose some of the foolish girls were jealous of me and my looks, so much so that I found they nicknamed me "The Beauty." Poor girls! If they had only known how little store I set by my looks, they would have behaved at first as they did later on.

The first thing that won them to me was when Mary Sanders was taken ill with a terrible fever. Madame Grainger was for sending her away at once, on account of her business, and the infection; but the doctor who was called in, a young, impetuous but very clever man, told her that it would be at her peril if she did so, for Mary Sanders' life was in danger. So the poor girl was shut up in her bedroom, without a soul to go near her except a hired nurse, and, after the first night, this woman stayed away.

No one dared go near the poor girl then, so I timidly asked leave to nurse her, for I felt no fear of the infection, and it seemed so hard for her to be left there alone.

I obtained leave, and went up stairs, staying with her till she recovered; and from that day there was always a kind look for me, and a kiss from every girl in the place.

What was more, oddly enough, perhaps because I was so quiet and restrained, first one girl and then another came to make me the confidant of her love secrets, and ask my advice.

I gave it, such as it was, though heartsore myself, for Jack's letters to me had suddenly ceased. We had corresponded so regularly; but it had struck me that his last two letters had been formal and constrained; they were full of business matters, too, and he had hinted at its being possible that he should not be able to keep time about the three years, in consequence of some contract.

I did not think this when I first read these letters, for then I had kissed and cried over them; but when no reply came to my last, I re-read them, and the coldness seemed apparent.

But I waited and waited, and then news came from the country. Jack's father, a widower, had died suddenly; and I said to myself, with throbbing heart, as I longed to be at his side to try and comfort him in his affliction, "Poor Jack, he will come home now."

But he did not come, neither did I get any reply to my last two letters. Another month and the three years would be up; and as I sat over some work one spring morning by the open window, with a bunch of violets that one of the girls had brought me in a glass, the soft breeze that came floating over the chimney-pots and sooty roofs, wafted to me the scent of the humble little blossoms, and my eyes became full of tears, for an instant the busy work-room had passed away, and I was down home by the riverside, listening to dear Jack, as he asked me to be his wife.

Only a month! only a month! my pulses seemed to beat; and as it happened we were all busy upon a large wedding order, and I was stitching away at the white satin skirt intended for the bride.

I tried so hard to bear it, but I could not, the rush of feelings was too great. Another month, and he was to have fetched me to be his wife, and I had not had an answer to my last two fond and loving letters.

As I said, I tried so hard to bear it, but I could not, and, stifling a sob, I hurried out of the work room to reach my attic, threw myself upon my knees by the bed, and burying my face in my hands, I sobbed as if my heart would break.

For the terrible thought would come now, fight against it as I would—"Jack has grown tired of waiting, and has married another."

I fought so hard with the disloyal thought, but it would come, and I was sobbing passionately, when I felt a soft arm steal round my neck, a tender cheek laid to my mind, and I found my poor tear-stained face drawn down upon the bosom of Mary Sanders, who had stolen out of the work-room, and come up to try and comfort me.

"Pray, pray don't fret, my darling," she whispered. "Madame will be so cross. Those wedding things must be in by to-night, and they want you to help try them on."

I don't know how I got through that day and night, but I believe I did such duties as were expected from me mechanically, or as if I had been in a dream, and at night I lay wakeful and weary, with aching eyes and heart, thinking of that dreadful idea that was trying to force itself upon me.

I waited till the three years had expired, and then, with what anguish of heart no words could tell, I wrote to Jack again—my fourth letter—begging him, imploring him to answer me, if but to tell me he was weary of his promise, and wished to be set free; and then, making a superhuman effort over myself, I waited, waited, month by month, for an answer, though I knew that it must be at least six months before one could come.

I had given up expecting one in the interim, and I was too proud to send to his relatives—distant ones, whom I had never seen, and who had probably never heard of me. The thought had taken root now, and grown to a feeling of certainty; but I waited for my answer.

Three months—six months—nine months passed away, and hope was dead within my heart. They said I had grown much older and more careworn. Madame said I worked too hard, and the sharp business woman became quite motherly in her attentions to me. But I would not take any change, for work was like balm to me, it blunted my thoughts; and knowing that I was daily growing pale and thin, I still waited.

I knew the girls used to whisper together about me, and think me strange, but no one knew my secret—not even madame, who had more than once sought my confidence; and so twelve months passed away—four years since Jack had left me.

It was not a day, but very nearly to the time when he had parted from me, and it was almost two years since I had heard from him. I was trying hard to grow patient and contented with my lot, for Madame Grainger had gradually taken to me, and trusted me, making me more and more her right hand, when one glorious spring morning, as I was coming out of the breakfast room to go up stairs to work, she called me into her little snuggery, where she sat as a rule and attended to her customers' letters, for she had an extensive clientele, and carried on business in a large private mansion in Welbeck Street.

"Grace, my dear," she said, taking me in her arms, and kissing me, "it worries me to see you look so ill. Now what do you say to a fortnight in the country?"

A fortnight in the country! and at her busiest time, with the London season coming on.

I thought of that, and then, as I glanced round at the flowers and inhaled their scents—the bright fields near Templemore Grange floated before my dimming eyes, a feeling of suffocation came upon me, and the room seemed to swing round. I believe that for the first time in my life I should have fainted, so painful were the memories evoked by her words, when a sharp knock and ring at the door echoed through the house, following instantly upon the dull fall of a letter, and the sharp click of the letter box.

It was like an electric shock to me, and without a word I darted into the hall, panting with excitement, and my hand at my throat to tear away the stifling sensation.

But it was a letter. I could see it thro' the glass in the letter box, and I seized it with trembling hands, inspired as it were by some strange power.

"Jack! dear Jack, at last!" I gasped, as I turned it over, and saw it was a strange, blue, official-looking letter, formally directed to me.

Even that did not surprise me. It was from Jack, I knew, and I tore open the blue envelope.

Yes, I knew it! The inner envelope was covered with Australian post-marks, and, ignorant as I might be of its contents, I was raising it to my lips to cover it with passionate kisses, when I saw it was open.

Then a mist came over my mental vision for a moment, but only to clear away as, half stupefied, I turned the missive over and over, held it straight for a moment; and then, with a sigh of misery and despair, I stood mute, and as if turned to stone.

"Grace, my child! In mercy's name tell me—"

It was madame, who passed her arm round me, and looked horror-stricken at my white face and lips. The next moment I dimly remember she had caught the letter—his letter—my letter from my hand, and read it aloud: "Mr. John Braywood, Markboro, R. County Melbourne," and then, in her excitement; the great official sentence-like brand upon it—"Dead!"

That was the beginning of my first and only illness, during which madame tended me like a mother, even to giving up her business afterwards, and retiring to live with me here in this quiet street, where she died, and left me well-to-do, as you see. I have grown old since then, but I am not unhappy, great as was the trial and it has led me into what has, I hope, been a useful life. And, besides, why should I sorrow, knowing as I do that which came to me years and years after—that Jack died with my name upon his lips—died true to her he loved? and I am but waiting till we shall meet again.

A HEROIC ACT.

It was when Wm. C. Conner, the popular Sheriff, was Secretary of Protection Engine Company 5, and the Volunteer Fire Department of New York city was in full force and in all its glory that the subjoined incident, enough in compass upon which to build a romance, transpired.

It is not necessary to mention with particularity the number of the street, for the old structure was long ago removed where the fire broke out. Very near the time has been given, and that should be sufficient.

The clocks of the city, large and small, had struck the hour of ten of a bitterly cold night in December, and orderly-disposed people were about preparing to retire, when suddenly the City Hall and all the other great fire bells, began ringing furiously. In those days the alarms were not given by stations, and the firemen often experienced no little difficulty and considerable loss of time in seeking the exact locality of a conflagration.

On this occasion, however, the flames shot suddenly upward, and every one knew that the fire was on the East Side of the town, and was certainly below Market Street. It was, in fact, in Madison Street, in a four-story tenement house.

The flames had gained considerable headway before the engines could get at their fitful work—they were worked by hand then—and it was with no little difficulty that the inmates succeeded, losing their furniture, in escaping unscathed.

But as the flames leaped with great forked tongues from window to window and from floor to floor, it began at first to be whispered and then with large cries asserted, that a little girl, between four and five years old, was asleep in a back room on the upper story.

The mother of the child rushed frantically toward the burning building, and in a vain effort, for such it would have been for her, to have thoughtlessly and recklessly entered it.

One of the assistant engineers, however, stopped her. He even gently pushed her back, finally placing her in the care of a policeman, at the same time informing her that if it were humanly possible her little one should be rescued from the flames.

While he spoke—not, however, believing his own words, for he thought no one could reach it—ladders were hurriedly placed against the front of the structure, and hose was served up them in order to drive back the forked flames from the chamber in which, if not already smothered by the smoke, the child might be.

While this work was being accomplished, a bright-eyed, handsome-looking and resolute boy of about fourteen years, broke through the cordon, and running to the engineer said:

"I can save the little girl. Her name is Lottie Wilson, sir. I know which way to go and how to do it. She'll be burnt up or smothered before they can get water on the fourth floor. Just tell some of the men to play on the stairs and I'll be all right. It's the only way, sir."

"But, boy," hurriedly returned the engineer, "don't you see the stairs are already on fire."

"Play on them then," shouted the boy as he ran forward.

In another second—hardly stopping to elude falling bricks and pieces of burned and broken timbers that came from the doors, windows and roof of the house—he was beyond human succor, so far as could be given by those who saw him disappear.

And now a great hush fell upon the vast assemblage.

Many had actually seen—all had heard of the brave boy—and there were people who murmured:

"God save him! Who is he?"

And now the assistant engineer, in a loud voice, instructed the men who had the pipes to play directly upon the stairs, and, if possible, for a minute or two, conquer the flames that were leaping toward them, scorching and eating into them.

The excitement, though subdued, was terribly—fearfully intense.

Every one was on the look out, and now and again some person, whose nerves were overwrought, would cry,

"There! There he is!"

But the aching multitude of men and women, whose eyes never left the entrance to the fated house, knew better.

They not only watched, but hoped and prayed.

Even the voice of the unhappy mother was hushed with expectation.

All this while, moments seemed hours, the firemen played in the direction of the stairs; and not withstanding, the flames were steadily making headway!

And the brave boy. What of him?

It was soon ascertained that he was a "printer's devil," and, that his name was Julius Franklin.

That was sufficient just then for the terribly excited throng of on-lookers.

And Franklin! His subsequent story was nearly as follows:

"When I got upon the lower stairs I found that the flames were all around me, but that the steps were yet strong enough to bear me up, and that if I hastened I might succeed in getting down them with safety.

"At the first landing a dense cloud of smoke swept down upon and nearly choked me. There was no flame in it, however. I immediately fell upon my face and with mouth to the hot boards I crawled to the next flight of stairs. Up these I succeeded in getting, with much trouble. At the second landing there was a window, this I burst open and gasped for air. It was for a mouthful only that I struggled, when I had that I made another effort, and, although I found, that everything I touched was as hot as if just taken out of an oven, I strugged on. I don't suppose I could have been more than a minute in the house, up to this time, but it really seemed to have been at least a full half hour; and as no water had, as yet, been thrown in the direction of the stairs, I concluded that the assistant engineer thought I was a fool, and had made up his mind to let me perish in the flames for my presumption. This made me feel awful, I tell you. But there was no turning back; the little girl should be saved, or I perish with her.

"When I made up my mind to this, I became as cool as a cucumber: I had no more fear, I rushed up the next flight, and just as I turning to mount the last one a piece of rafter fell upon me. It was all aflame. It struck me on the head and then dropped on the floor. I knew, then, that cold water had been poured upon it. I kicked the stick out of the way, and the next minute I was at the door where I felt sure the child was, I burst it open, and was again struck in the face by a dense volume of smoke. I felt as if the girl must have been smothered.

"Just as I again crawled forward to find the bed whereon I had supposed the little one had been lying, I caught hold of a little foot, I drew it toward me, drew it and the body attached to it out on the landing. It was that of the child, Lottie Wilson. I was quite certain she was dead; but I took her in my arms and attempted the descent.—Now, if the assistant engineer had not ordered the pipes to be turned on the stairs, I do believe it would have been better for us both—Lottie and I.

"The water as it struck in great volumes upon the stairs and into the passages, had the effect of driving the smoke toward us.

"I had to stand on the upper landing, with the flames constantly and persistently undermining me, until the clouds of smoke had been driven past me.

"When at last I saw my way down the terrible passage, I involuntarily offered a prayer for safety. At almost every step the flames would start up, and once or twice, as I descended, the steps broke in two, because they were nearly burnt apart by the licking, eating fire. It seemed an eternity to me before I finally reached the last stairway. It was trembling and would presently fall! That I saw at a glance. Then, after so much, was I to perish where I stood, with Lottie Wilson's body in my arms?"

"Suddenly there was a crash.

"I looked to see the stairs fall—for when they went, I thought my doom was forever sealed. I was becoming, I felt, exhausted.

"But there was something else gave way at that moment.

"The upper part of a tall ladder was driven through a window within a foot of where I was standing; and then, just as I felt my consciousness going from me, I heard in a hoarse voice the single word,

"Saved!

"Then there was a great roar, and I knew nothing, except that I thought I was falling into a deep dark pit.

"They told me a week later," continued Franklin, "at the hospital that I had been seen with little Lottie standing at the head of the stairs, and that there was one way—as the stairs were succumbing to the flames, and would presently fall—to save me, and that was by putting up a ladder, and a fireman rushing up it and seizing and bodily lifting me out of the building, which it also was thought was about to fall, and which did tumble down a minute or two later.

"'Then that must have been the roar I heard. It sounded like the breaking of the tide upon the shore at Sandy Hook.'

"'Oh, no,' I was answered; 'it was the mighty and delighted cheer of the people who were relieved of their terrible excitement when they saw you and the rescued girl. Why, Franklin you are the hero of the day!'

"'Well,' I asked, desirous of turning the conversation from myself, 'is the little girl dead?'

"'No, indeed,' was the answer of my friend; 'she's as sound and lively as a cricket. She is here to thank you for saving her.'

"A sweet faced child, with a pretty mouth and dark blue eyes and auburn hair, here approached my pallet, and putting her lips to mine, gave me a hearty kiss.

"'I love you ever so much,' she said in her little, artless way.

"'And what am I in this place for?' I continued.

"'Why, you had your skull cracked,' was the answer, 'and the doctors wonder how it was done, and how you managed to retain consciousness under it for any time. They think it must have been caused by the falling of a beam, as the bones were crushed in quite flat-like!'

"Then I recalled the accident which happened to me on the third story, when I felt the strange sensation of water being thrown suddenly over me, producing so peculiar a shock. In a month I was discharged, convalescent, but it was a year before the soreness really got out of my poor head.

"Well, years have come and gone since then. I learned my trade of printer, while Lottie Wilson grew into a beautiful young woman, and now, what do you think?"

"I cannot guess," I said.

"Why," he returned, with a genial smile, "she's Mrs. Franklin—and the kindest, truest, sweetest wife and mother in all this world."

"CERTAINLY HE WOULD."

Behind his back was the brick wall of a stable. In front of him was a well paved alley, which stretched away until lost in the dim distance. A barrel of ashes stood guard at his right, and to the left was an old wagon whose sands of life had run out. It was not a beautiful spot—not such a place as Dom Pedro would journey far to see and linger longer long beside, but it was good enough for a man whose legs were weak, eyes heavy, and head so large that he wore his old hat on his ear. He was sighing and groaning and moaning when the officer got hold of him, and he only revived sufficiently to murmur:

"Never did care much for sody wasser. Fetch jes same you I'll take shin an' slinger."

"Young man," said the court, in a hoarse voice, when he had listened to the above, "do you know that you are drifting down to degradation?"

"Is that so?" exclaimed the prisoner, looking around in alarm.

"Yes, sir, you are; when a man gets so that his hat won't fit his head, and that he can sleep on the starboard side of an alley as well as in a forty dollar bed, he is very near the margin of that river which floats him into an unhonored grave."

"Gosh!" whispered the man.

"Now, sir, do you mean to be good—to float on a level with good society—to be a man among men, or do you want to die as the horse dies, and have a base-ball match playing over your grave as a requiem?"

"I want to be good—certainly, I do," said Mr. Hopkins. "I've allus wanted to be more or less good."

"I could send you up for six months," continued the court, feeling of his ear; "I could put you where cherry pie was never heard of, and where starched shirt-bosoms are never spoken of except in low whispers."

"I believe you could," replied the prisoner, "but don't do it; give a fellow another chance."

"Have you ever been here before?"

"Certainly not."

"And you want to go home?"

"I do. I'm homesicker'n a dog. I'd give a million dollars if I was in my back yard now."

"I'm going to let you go, Mr. Hopkins, but you know the state of my feelings toward you. If you come again, I'll know that you rather be a low-down man, than a great statesman, and I'll give you a dose of fatherly advice and House of Correction so well mixed together that you won't get over it in six months by the clock."

"Certainly you would, and I shouldn't blame you," replied the farmer, and he bowed to his Honor, to Bijah, to the clerk, and stepped softly out, and tried to borrow ten cents to get what he called a "sand hamwhich" for breakfast.—Detroit Free Press.

Democratic Nominations.

For President,
SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
OF NEW YORK.

For Vice President,
THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
OF INDIANA.

THE ANTIDOTE.

The expenditures of the General Government have been swollen to such a frightful extent, that a change of administration is now a matter of necessity.

That a vast saving can be effected, and the public service at the same time efficiently maintained, by inaugurating a system of judicious economy, is a plain practical fact.

To accomplish an end so vitally advantageous to the people, a new set of officials must be placed in authority.

Exchanging Mr. Hayes for Mr. Grant will be only running the same extravagant machine in the same old rut. That and nothing better.

The people are tired of paying much for little. A change, they argue, cannot make things worse, and many bring about a decided improvement.

Reform is the popular battle cry.

Governor Tilden upholds that banner.

It will conquer, because demanded as an antitode for existing evils.

Judicious economy means honest payment for whatever is requisite to carry on Government for the welfare of all classes of people and the preservation of national honor. It stands in direct antagonism to fraud, favoritism, corruption and profligacy of every name and hue.

In a word it is Honesty.

It would cut down to actual wants the outrageous sums annually squandered in time of peace as Military and Naval Appropriations.

It would abolish the thousands of sinecure officers, political lazaroni, drawing pay without work.

It would scatter the hordes of thieves that prowl around the Treasury, professing patriotism and practicing plunder.

It would rapidly decrease the public debt and thereby lessen taxation.

It is the Democratic Reform faithfully promised in the nominations of TILDEN AND HENDRICKS.

Wendell Phillips having in a published letter criticised the military action of Government regarding the Indians, General Sherman brands the language of Mr. Phillips as "impudent." Take care of your scalp, General! Wendell is an American citizen, fully entitled to hold and express whatever opinions he thinks fit, and if he makes for you, it will be a terrible onslaught. The pen of Phillips is a more formidable weapon than even the rifle of Sitting Bull.

Our Republican friends boastingly quote Gen. Dix as an opponent of Mr. Tilden, the Democratic candidate for President. Gen. Dix is a respectable old gentleman, but only human. He can never forget nor forgive the way Samuel J. Tilden defeated his Gubernatorial aspirations in the State of New York. Circumstances often influence sentiments. Of course Dix is opposed to Tilden now as he was two years ago.

Here is the situation to a dot. One term of Hayes would just make the third term of Grantism.

REPUBLICAN PARTY.

What course do the Republican party intend to pursue during the coming campaign is a pertinent inquiry now.—Do they purpose to employ the inflammatory plan, or do they design to submit the whole question to the people after resorting only to the usual mode employed at such times, viz: Mass meetings, the sending into the several States of their best speakers, &c., relying simply upon the intelligence of the people? Here they have always claimed to have the advantage. We have been told with a pitying tone, for years, that all the intelligence, all the wealth, all the morality, all the respectability and all the ability in the land were massed under the Republican banner; while all the ignorance, poverty and viciousness were huddled together on the opposing side. So frequently has this been said and so finally dwelt upon, that even Democrats began to speculate on its truth. Had this been so, it would seem to follow, that so pure a party had but to name its candidates, to ensure their election; and it seemed, for a time, that the people believed all this and acted accordingly, for at one time there was but one Democratic Governor in the whole Union; and it is to the credit and glory of our own State, that she can say that he was hers. But by and by a change began to indicate itself in the public mind. Little by little a suspicion grew, that all was not as fair as it seemed.—The saints in the party, who had been venerated of all men, were discovered to be here and there, a little spotted; the rank and file were found, now and then, slightly confused as to the proper application of the rules regulating the difference between other people's property and their own and the suspicion grew. Under this condition of feeling a State would swing from her ancient moorings and go Democratic and then another until the pure leaders of this immaculate party began to take the alarm; they saw they were losing ground and that something must be done to avert impending ruin, and we can see in the light of recent developments, how complete that ruin would have been. Abandoning their pretended reliances on the intelligence of the people they resorted to means calculated to blind it and to excite their worst passions. The Southern outrage mill was set to work, the bloody shirt was trailed over the land, the people were reminded of the great services of the party and implored not to undo the work of the war, which would certainly be the result they claimed if the Democratic party came into power. These and various other devices were employed and for a time, perhaps, with some success, but revolutions never go backwards and the flood came giving the country a Democratic House. The fearful developments of fraud and general corruption brought to light by the investigations of the House, in which the highest officials in the country are involved, the evident sympathy of the President with the criminals, the pertinacity with which the leaders of the party seek to cover up delinquencies and thwart investiga*tion, and the fact that Gov. Hayes will* find it impossible to make such a change as will be at all serviceable to the country or correction of the evils complained of, are all having their effects; the people are learning with indignation, how thoroughly their confidence has been abused. They see that the great party to which they cling, which they loved as the supposed concentration of all that was pure, patriotic and virtuous, is but a wilted sepulchre full of all vileness, and the demand has gone forth for a change. In the name of all that is pure and just let it come!

We are persuaded that, though the outrage mill may again be set at work, the bloody shirt displayed, the bitter memories of the war cruelly revived, even though, the Administration may wickedly send its bayonets to the South, in violation of all right and all law, the days of Republican rule are numbered, and that after the 4th of next March, the country will be permitted to recover from its prostration and be restored to prosperity and peace under an honest, Democratic Administration.

HAYES IS GRANTISM IN DISGUISE.

If there is any one that doubts that the Administration of Hayes, if elected, would be but a continuation of Grantism under another name let him read the Cincinnati platform and the letter of acceptance of Hayes.

That platform contains the following resolution: (17)

> "The national administration merits commendation for its honorable work in the management of domestic and foreign affairs, and President Grant deserves the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense services in war and in peace."

And in his letter of acceptance Hayes says referring to that platform: "The resolutions are in accord with my views and I heartily concur in the principles they announce."

Is this the sort of man to give us the reform in administration which the whole country demands.

Can any reasonable man expect reform at the hands of a man who is either so dull of comprehension as to honestly think that Grant's Administration should be endorsed or so dishonest as to say it should be endorsed when he knows and thinks it should not be!

Is a man who can pass by all the corruption and fraud and extravagance of the present administration and see nothing in it but what should be endorsed, a proper man to be elected President of the United States of America at the beginning of the second century of its existence as a nation?

Or does not his letter of acceptance rather show conclusively that the man is heart and soul in the power and under the control of the wicked and corrupt leaders of the Grant party to whom he owes his nomination and that he dare not give utterance to the convictions of his own mind. Such we think is the only conclusion that can logically be drawn. And such being the case it would even be worse for the country to have Hayes elected than it would be to have Grant, for Grant as the power behind the throne would be even more dangerous than in the seat of Government himself, for in the former position he can without personal responsibility have acts done of a more heinous character than he would dare to do in the latter position.

This we believe is the opinion which prevails among the great mass of the independent and thinking voters of the country and the effect will beyond question be the election of Samuel J. Tilden, the great practical reformer, by an overwhelmingly majority and we will then have at the head of our government a man whose intellect, independence, firmness and integrity, will make him honored and respected at home and abroad—and insure a pure and honest Administration.

THE PARK QUESTION.

Public opinion seems to be divided on the question of ownership of the plot of ground and grove on 8th and 9th street, formerly known as "Dow's Grove." Since our last issue, the Common Council has held a special meeting and voted to commence legal proceedings against the present claimant, Mr. —— Price. Full proceedings of this meeting will be found in another column. Upon the strength of the action of the Common Council the Mayor on Tuesday issued an order to Capt. Breen to put a stop to any illegal acts being enacted on the premises. The Capt. accordingly proceeded to the grounds and finding Councilman E. C. Mulford, (who is the contractor for building the four new houses contemplated on the grounds) at work with pick and shovel, promptly placed that gentleman under arrest, but later he was released by the order of arrest being countermanded by His Honor, the Mayor. On Wednesday, Capt. Breen served a notice on Mr. Price, commanding his appearance before the Courts on the 7th of August next, to show cause why he has authority to build on the plot in question, in other words, the Corporation Counsel has carried the matter into the Supreme Court, and a long legal fight may be expected. Now, while we, in common with others of our citizens, do most earnestly desire that the City of Plainfield might be the possessor of a public park, we doubt the wisdom of our City Fathers in rushing headlong into a lawsuit that will probably involve the city in a debt. We have just voted the city $5,000 extra to liquidate debts hanging over it, and hope our citizens will not soon again be called upon for that purpose. We have carefully studied all the points in the case, pro and con, on both sides, as far as we have been able to learn, and in our opinion the matter becomes more complicated each day, and the prospect is—a long law-suit, with plenty of lawyer's fees, and nothing gained in the end. We doubt not but the members of Council who voted to prosecute the case, did so with the conviction that they were serving the city conscientiously and looking after its best interests. If the city's coffers were overburdened with funds, it might be judicious at this time to spend a little of it in the endeavor to procure this piece of ground, although in the end it can never furnish a Park of sufficient size to accommodate the growing city of Plainfield. Again, our city has not the funds to keep in repairs a public park, pay taxes on the same, &c., at the present writing, and the suburbs of Plainfield abounds in groves and shaded hills, affording cool shelter to the thousands who may choose to visit them, free of expense. We trust our City Fathers will count up the cost before they go too deep in the matter.

* * *

The Young Men's Tilden & Hendrick's Reform Club met in their temporary rooms over Vetterlein's Hardware Store last Monday evening and elected twenty-five new members proposed at a previous meeting. The names of many new members were also proposed. Permanent meeting rooms will be procured shortly, when the Club, with their thorough organization intend entering the campaign with zeal and do yeoman's service for the candidates of Reform.—Now let the Jackson Democratic Association immediately re-organize and co operate with the Young Men's Club, and Plainfield will give a good account of herself next fall.

* * *

A large ratification meeting was held by the anti-Tammany democracy of New York City at Irving Hall, on Monday night. The spacious room was filled, and there was a throng in the street unable to gain admittance.—There was speaking both inside and outside the hall, addresses being made by Samuel B. Garvin, who presided, John P. Stockton, and Leon Abbott, of New Jersey Charles W. Brooke, Simon Sterne, James D. McClelland, of New York and others. Horatio Seymour, Abram S. Hewitt, Samuel J. Randall, Samuel S. Cox, Benjamin A. Willis, Elijah Ward, Scott Lord, and Oswald Ottendorfer sent letters of sympathy and regret for their absence. The resolutions and speeches presented reform as the great issue, and declared that it could be secured only by the election of Tilden and Hendricks.

* * *

Parker Godwin, who was a member of the Fifth Avenue Conference in New York, addressed an able letter to the Tribune, in which the whole political situation is reviewed and the conclusion reached that both the platform and the candidates of the democratic party are superior to the republican, and that it is the duty of republicans who favor reform to stand by Tilden.

I, who have for many years stood by this noble man, and been the eye-witness of his gallant fights with "the beasts at Ephesus," would be recreant to the labor and aspirations of my whole life not to lend him my heartiest support.
PARKE GODWIN.
Roslyn, L. I., July 18, 1876.

NEW JERSEY'S POLITICAL RECORD.

A New York contemporary, in discussing the political chances in New Jersey, as one of the States which will decide the Presidential contest, says that previous to the corruption of the Republican party under recent administrations, the State was usually Republican. This is an error. New Jersey long ago, when State after State was driven from its constitutional moorings, earned the reputation of being faithful among the faithless to the Democratic party.

The republican party was organized in 1856. Of the seven Governors elected since that time four have been Democrats, and three immediately preceding, which carry us back to 1844, were Democrats, making seven democratic Governors out of ten.

Going back in Presidential campaigns twenty-four years, New Jersey has cast her electorial vote for the Democratic party every time except in 1870. In 1860, when a Fusion ticket was run by the Democrats, a portion of the Electors were defeated owning to a mistake in the printing of the ballots that were used in the southern part of the State.

It has been only in moments of temporary political aberration that New Jersey has wandered from the Democratic faith. Her people are a moderate, thinking people, and they hate the follies and fallacies of radicalism as much as they abhor the vile corruption of the Republican party. In the campaign now opened our State may be counted on for the Democracy. If there is anything against which her people are united it is against the unmitigated scoundrelism that now rules in the government, and no such confidence game as the Republicans are playing, with their "wolf in sheep's clothing," will hoodwink Jerseymen into the support of men and measures they hold in thorough detestation.

New Jersey is for Tilden and Hendricks.

THE ONLY SURVIVOR.

The New Haven Register says: Lieut. Fred. Grant is the only surviving officer and man of the detachment of the immortal Seventh cavalry regiment, commanded by Gen. Custer. But he escaped not from the Little Big Horn, as the only survivor of Leonidas' band did, to tell the story. And it is fortunate that he did not. For the Spartans indignantly uprose and killed their bearer of undying dispatches for not exposing his life to the last recreant foe; and had Fred. been there, and escaped that wild ride into the cul-de-sac of death, there is no telling what the American people, in a moment of mad imitative frenzy, might not have done to him. Fortunate Fred! to live in a history as the only survivor (in a horn) of the immortal three hundred that rode gallantly down to death on the Little Big Horn!

* * *

The New Jersey Court of Pardons has refused to make public the names of the eight convicts pardoned giving as a reason that the fact of a recreant father or son was, in most cases, the first intimation their families would receive that they had been in prison.—They might have believed them to have been in different parts of the country. Another reason why the names were refused was that the publication of the names in the papers frequently brings respectable persons unnecessarily before the public. Strong efforts were made to have a pardon granted to the defaulting State Treasurer of New Jersey, Josephus Sooy, but it is understood that the Court refused to grant one.

* * *

The Democrats of Elizabeth, N. J., met at the Greundler House, Friday night, and permanently organized for the campaign. They elected ex-Chancellor Williamson, President, and a vice president from eight of the ten city wards.

* * *

The property of Josephus Sooy, the defaulting State Treasurer, in Shamong township, Burlington county, consisting of water power, saw mill and a piece of land, was sold on Saturday by Sheriff Lee of Mercer county for $7,240, to satisfy a portion of the claim of the Sinking Fund Commissioners of New Jersey.

Said an old farmer the other day, "It's a great, it's a grand, it's a glorious ticket nominated at St. Louis. You can turn it upside down, wrong end foremost, look at it from any direction, and you see nothing but honesty, reform, statesmanship."

The American People.

No people in the world suffer as much with Dyspepsia as Americans. Although years of experience in medicine has failed to accomplish a certain and sure remedy for this disease and its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Heart-burn, Water-brash, Sick Headache, Costiveness palpitation of the Heart, Liver Complaint, coming up of the food, low spirits, general debility, etc., yet since the introduction of GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER we believe there is no case of Dyspepsia that cannot be immediately relieved. 30,000 dozen sold last year without one case of failure being reported. Go to your Druggist Wm. H. Voorhees and get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you. Regular size 75 cents.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

A Large Volume would not contain the mass of testimony which has accumulated in favor of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry as a safe, efficient and reliable remedy in curing coughs, colds and pulmonary disease. Many of the cures are truly wonderful. 50 cts. and $1 a bottle, large bottles much the cheapest.

Rheumatism and Gout invariably benefited by sulphur bathing. The difficulty of procuring trustworthy sulphur baths without the dangerous exposure incident to public bathing-houses, has been fully met by Glenn's Invaluable Sulphur Soap. It is sold everywhere.

WALLACE VAIL, P. M.

DON'T build yourself up around too much watermelon.

THE handsome iron balcony in front of the City Hotel is now the observed of all observers.

MR. DAVID BEECH is building a high and substantial stone wall along the railroad side of his large coal yard.

THE released school boy now recuperates his health with green apples and strengthens his brain with dime novels.

CLIFTON & VAIL have for sale some fine Jersey watermelons. We can see them from our window but have not tasted them yet, but—

MR. MEYER's new residence on Park Avenue, which is rapidly nearing completion, will be the handsomest dwelling on that street.

NOTWITHSTANDING the intense heat, the balls from several times yesterday morning, during a billiard match at the Cosmopolitan Rooms.

THE young men say that if the girls persist in catching up their trails with one hand, they will raise their coat tails in the same style.

END THORP's tame coons delight visitors with their funny antics. A screaming "polly" has also been added to his collection of curiosities.

MR. Levi Hart, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has broken ground for the erection of a house and barn on Netherwood Ave., near Front St. Messrs. Hart & Dunham, contractors.

A YOUNG man was murdered in Mexico recently for refusing to drink a glass of beer. In Plainfield these bloodthirsty assassins would find their occupation gone.

WHEN the flies begin to hum around and alight on the end of your nose in the mornings, causing you to give fierce winks and unfamiliar smiles, it is surely time to get up.

A CURIOSITY may be seen at Peck's Avon Park House, in the shape of a live stork, which wades about the pond in the rear of the house and feeds upon the small frogs and fish.

THE farmers hereabouts have been actively engaged for the past two weeks in gathering their crops, which yielded finely. It is stated however that corn will not yield a full crop.

WE noticed a handsome new business wagon on our streets with the name of our enterprising business man, James H. Acor, Ornamental Plasterer, on its side, which shows that Mr. A's business is prospering.

THE 71st Reg. N. G. S. N. Y., passed through this city on Monday last on their way to the Centennial grounds, making the trip in two hours from foot of Clarkson St., N. Y., via Philadelphia and Bound Brook new line.

THE Board of Trade met in Laing's Parlors last Monday evening. Rooms have been secured for regular meetings in Berry's building, corner of Front and Cherry Sts. The Board of Trade is now an established organization in thorough working order and dead beats will have to take a back seat.

The Boards of Chosen Freeholders of Union and Somerset Counties met on Saturday last on the site of a proposed new bridge on Netherwood Avenue, where it crosses Green Brook, and after viewing the same decided to locate a bridge there, the same to be put out by contract to the lowest bidder, proposals being advertised for.

MRS. JOHN QUAAS has commenced the removal of her dwelling house, situated on William Street, intending to move it about half a block west of its present location, and contemplates the erection of 2 new houses (20 x 40 ft. and 22 x 26) on the old site.—Mr. Jenkins does the moving. Mr. Lewis Randolph has the carpenter work of the new houses.

ON Wednesday morning, a buggy, containing two ladies, came into collision with a stone wagon on the corner of Front and Somerset Sts., somewhat as follows: The stone wagon was coming from the mountains heavily loaded, and as is the usual custom on this particular corner, (although contrary to law) kept the inside or left of the street. The ladies driving the horse and buggy took to the right, but seeing that there would be a collision, endeavored to pull their horse to the left, but not in time to prevent the pole of the stone wagon hitting the felloe of the hind wheel of their vehicle with such force as to "dish" the off hind wheel, thus giving friend Hannan, the wheelwright, a job. Both parties claim they are right, and it is probable some lawyer will decide the case.

YESTERDAY afternoon we were favored with a call from an agent for the work entitled "Our First Century," published by C. A. Nichols & Co., Springfield, Mass. This is known throughout the State of New Jersey to be a work of unparalleled value—an elaborate and studied record in separate chapters of the memorable incidents, phenomena, discoveries, inventions and achievements, political, naval and military, of the first century of our national history. The work is the result of eleven years continuous labor of one of our ablest writers. We have thoroughly examined it and find it as represented by our exchange, an invaluable work. The manufacture, paper, style and number of engravings and character of the work are far superior to any book we have ever seen sold by subscription. It has met the approbation of Presidents and Professors of Colleges, Clergy, Attorney's, and in fact, from a glance over the list of signatures, of every class of people. We can only say that the citizens of Plainfield are highly favored with the opportunity of ordering this work, which is far superior to any thing that has heretofore been issued from the American press, and should not fail to subscribe for it. We have ordered a copy.

Personalia.

Mrs. James M. Dunn is sojourning at the "Rock House" for her health, which is much improved thereby.

Mr. M. S. Wadley is still confined to his residence in North Plainfield by sickness.

We return thanks to Mr. Wm. Peck for a quantity of delicious apricots picked from trees in front of his Avon Park House.

Mr. A. P. M. Rooms and family have returned to the City Hotel, and taken rooms for the summer.

We are glad to learn that Mr. James C. Pope is convalescent and will soon again enter upon the discharge of his duties.

Honesty is the best Policy.

Two cases of honesty occurring in our city within a few weeks has been brought to our notice and we think desire mention.—One was in the case of Mr. Chris. Van Arsdale, who lost his pocket book containing several hundred dollars. The book was lost out of his coat pocket while riding, and was found by Master John Tier, son of Councilman Tier, who promptly took steps to return the same to the owner. When found the money had fallen from the book and lay scattered about the road. The other case was that of a young daughter of Henry Hand, who found a pocket book containing money, and seeing the same advertised in THE CONSTITUTIONALIST promptly returned the property to its owner. In both cases the finders were rewarded for their honesty.

NETHERWOOD Avenue is being opened to the station of that name from Front Street, the old railroad embankment being removed for that purpose. This will be a delightful drive when completed.

Athletic Sports.

Two of our young townsmen, Messrs. Hugh M. Gilligan and Eben Hart, Jr., members of the Plainfield Athletic Club, will compete for prizes in the handicap races at Mott Haven, N. Y., on Saturday, July 29th. Handicapping in Athletic sports is something new, and is attracting considerable attention by those interested in and fond of the sports. We trust to hear of our young friends each winning a prize. It would be an honor to themselves and their Club.

"Gather Them In."

The descendants of the Horton family in this country, have issued a letter, signed by 40 of the offspring, inviting all the members of the Horton family, and all connected with it by marriage or adoption, to help form a general re-union or gathering, in Philadelphia, commencing at 10 o'clock, A. M., on Thursday, 24th of August, 1876. It is arranged that all who attend, shall, on arriving in the city, register the name at the Washington Hotel, Chestnut street near 7th, in a book prepared for the purpose, where they will learn the programme of the meeting.

We quote the following from the letter:

> "Almost all the Hortons of our country have sprung from the three old Puritans, Thomas, Jeremiah and Barnabas. Thomas came over in 16[illegible], and Jeremiah and Barnabas not far from the same time. Thomas and Jeremiah settled in Massachusetts. Barnabas settled permanently at Southold, L. I., 1640. It is highly probable they were brothers."

Exchanges who will copy the above or its substance, will confer a favor on the family. We understand that our old friend, Stephen O. Horton and his family, of North Plainfield, will attend the gathering.

Private Theatricals and Reception at the Washington Rock Mountain House.

Some very clever and highly enjoyable Parlor Theatricals were enacted on Thursday evening, the 20th inst., at the Washington Rock Mountain House. A neat and complete stage was erected in the large hall room, with scenery, appointments, a handsome drop-curtain, &c. The plays commenced with the very laughable Comedietta of

BOX AND COX,

A Romance of Real Life.

John Box—A Journeyman Printer—Mr. W. H. Phillips.

James Cox—A Journeyman Hatter—Dr. F. H. Lee.

Mrs. Bouncer—Landlady—Miss Clara G. Sternberg.

And was followed by a Farce in one act entitled,

A QUIET FAMILY.

Mr. Benjamin Bibbs,	Dr. F. H. Lee.
Mr. Barnaby Bibbs,	Mr. W. H. Phillips.
Mr. Peter Barker,	Mr. S. P. Quackenbush.
Grumpy,	Mr. W. H. Van Orden.
Mrs. Benjamin Bibbs,	Miss Lil. Baker.
Mrs. Barnaby Bibbs,	Miss Clara G. Sternberg.
Miss Selina Summers,	Miss Minnie E. Lorton.
Snarley.	Miss Serina Phillips.

Notwithstanding the heat and the storm that prevailed the audience was large and attentive and gave the Amateurs a hearty welcome. The plays selected were wisely of the rapid, amusing, colloquial character, and the acting of them frequently elicited loud applause.

At the conclusion of the performance a collation was served up and dancing was proceeded with until nearly morning. Most of the party that took part in the Dramatic entertainment were from New York, and instead of retiring after the entertainment assembled to enjoy a New Jersey sunrise from the Observatory at Washington Rock. The stage decorations were made very attractive by the cleverness and ingenuity of Mr. Alfred H. Lorton, of New York, while the plays were under the conduct of Waldorf H. Phillips, Esq., of the same place.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

Mr. Taylor's residence at the foot of the mountain, on Somerset Street, is one of the finest in this section. Beautiful arbors and fountains about the large lawn serve to make the grounds attractive.

The new dam across the brook at Codington's mills is about complete, while the old dam above it has been removed. All that is now necessary is water to fill the large pond.

The fence and grounds about the Public School this side of the brook is in a beastly condition. The building also needs painting. It is anything but attractive about the grounds now.

Martin Newman, son of Joseph Newman, aged 12 years, died suddenly of cramps on Friday night last, caused, it is stated, by the lad's going in a swimming about a week previous, and remaining in the water two hours, after which he drank a quantity of ice water and ate green apples.

Mr. Judson A. Brown, cashier of N. Y. Herald, a resident on Duer Street, has caused a fine plank walk to be laid down in front of his residence, also on the walks around the house.

We learn that it is the intention of A. Berry, Esq. to cause a large well to be dug on his grounds next the brook, which may be used to procure water for the engines in case of fire in that vicinity. This work is commendable on the part of that public-spirited citizen.

Mr. William Shotwell has caused a pipe to be put down in front of his store on Duer Street from which water is not only procured for the purpose of laying the dust in the streets, but furnishes water for the thirsty horse of the traveler who feels disposed to stop there.

Mr. P. M. French lost a valuable mule, one of a team, who died from some unknown cause last Thursday evening.

FANWOOD FANCIES.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey have completed a new ferry boat to be called the "Fanwood;" it will be, when completed, one of the finest boats on the river. The citizens of this village and vicinity intend presenting her with a handsome set of flags, having already ordered the same, as an appreciation of the honor the Co. conferred in naming her after their beautiful place. Messrs. Chas. R. Kyte, George Squier and others have had the matter in charge, which is a sufficient guarantee of its being carried through successfully.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Henry Hetfield, Esq., of this village, who is well known to many of our citizens, although in his 83rd or 84th year, appears as young, enterprising and vigorous as many persons at fifty. The school teacher of his boyhood, Mr. Franse Coles, also resided in this place.

The regular monthly meeting of "Excelsior H. & L. Co. No. 1," of this village, occurred on Monday evening, 17th inst., in their rooms on Bartle Avenue. There was a good attendance and in the absence of the Foreman, 1st Ass't. John C. Moore presided.

Although the opposition of a few property owners prevented the macadamizing of Park Avenue, yet we are pleased to notice that the inhabitants of the road district are determined to have as good roads as they can otherwise have. By vote of the district they are to spend $1,100 in putting their roads in shape. Wm. H. Doan, Esq., has the work in charge and has been hauling gravel from the old railroad for that purpose, and although he is at present taking a vacation, he will resume work in a short time. The inhabitants of the Scotch Plains road district are doing nobly.

A somewhat singular incident occurred on Sunday evening, 16th inst., at the Baptist Church. As the speaker, the Rev. J. C. Buchanan, had nearly completed his discourse, his large audience at the time being deeply interested at the close of the following sentence in his peroration, viz:—"The moon shall turn to blood, the stars, one by one, shall be blotted out, and even the light of the sun shall fade into darkness," the gas lights in the church, as if to literally exemplify the remarks of the speaker, went immediately out, and the audience were in real and total darkness. It appeared, however, that it was by an accident of some one in the gas house.

We understand that the Scotch Plains Fire Company "in time of peace are preparing for war." Whether it is because they are anticipating an attack from Sitting Bull and his Sioux savages, or because they have determined upon the offensive and are preparing to avenge the cruel death of the gallant Custer, who had several warm, personal friends in that Company, it is not ours to know. Certain it is, however, that at their last regular meeting a cannon, adorned with the National emblems and mounted upon a carriage, was wheeled upon their premises, and presented to the Company by their generous-hearted 1st Ass't., John C. Moore. We would suggest to the Company that after this piece has fulfilled its war-like mission against the "bloody Sioux" or otherwise, that it be kept in readiness to "shoot" such fires as are beyond their reach, and to salute each National anniversary, and the Company's anniversary, and to be used as an extra fire alarm.

Mr. Henry Kyte has been appointed School Trustee in place of Mr. W. Ackerman, resigned. This is a good appointment, and those who wish the School and School business carried on in a just and impartial manner should support Mr. Kyte at the coming election for School Trustee. He is the right man in the right place.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the M. E. Church, held in the class-room of the Church last Friday evening, a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Young, Jr., of Fanwood, for having made a donation of twenty dollars to the Church. The Treasurer reported forty dollars in hand, and the Collector, Mr. Gibbs, reported the minister paid up to date.

The Rev. P. Harrower, Pastor of the M. E. Church, is to preach in the M. E. Church, Plainfield, Sunday week, Aug. 6th.

With pleasure we announce the recovery of Mr. Gibbs, Foreman of the firm of Harper, Hollingsworth & Darby, who it will be remembered with a sad accident some eight weeks ago.

Our Road Master, Mr. H. Deane, is making a great improvement upon our main road. Now let him attack the sidewalks.

Miss Watson, Missionary Teacher at Karen, addressed the Scotch Plains Baptist Sunday School last Sunday afternoon upon the "habits, customs, mode of life and religion" of the heathen in Burmah, after which Mrs. W. C. Butler, of Plainfield, led in the organization of a Woman's Missionary Society in this place.

Mr. Traynor, of this place, is erecting a cottage on Forest Avenue, Fanwood, near the residence of Thos. S. Young, Esq. Mr. Frantz, on Westfield Avenue, has the contract for the work.

On Wednesday, 26th inst., a company of young ladies and gentlemen from this place, and that "classic region" familiarly known as "Short Hills," went on an excursion to Florida Grove for the purpose of salt water bathing. A good time was had.

We are sorry to learn of the illness of our Democratic friend, George R. Nichell, Esq., of Scotch Plains, from malarial fever.

The Rev. J. C. Buchanan, of this village, with his family and a party of friends, visited Niagara Falls last week.

On Sunday last the Rev. J. C. Buchanan, of this village, preached (morning and evening) to large audiences in the Baptist Church, Somerville.

On Sunday, July 23rd, the Rev. George M. Vanderlip, of the American Baptist Publication Society, N. J., preached at the Baptist Church, this village, morning and evening.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

The Rev. J. Judson Pierson, of North Plainfield, supplied the vacant pulpit of the Westfield Baptist Church in able manner on Sunday last. Next Sunday and the succeeding Sunday, the Rev. H. W. Jones, of Brooklyn, will preach in the same place.

Trotting.

A large number of spectators were present at the Driving Park on Wednesday last to witness the trot for a purse of $50 between well-known horses. From some cause unknown to us, DeCamp's "Duke" and Osborne's "Lady Blanche" were not entered, which left three horses—Briar's "Uncle John," Fisk's "Belle A," and Gid Dunham's black Mare to contest for the purse. The trotting was not up to the usual standard, it being evident that "Uncle John" and the "Black Mare" were held back by their drivers to save a record. Considerable dissatisfaction was manifest among the audience at such action, and the Judges—Messrs. Het. Acken, J. H. Platt and J. Bishop, finally notified the drivers that if they did not let their horses come up that it would be necessary to change drivers, but no such decision was called upon to be carried out as the next heat was trotted in better time. The race was won by "Belle A," the first heat being taken by "Uncle Ned." The time made was 3:04; 2:59¼; 2:58; 3:04. There was also a race between Henry Hand's pacer and R. Drake's mare, which was won by the latter in two straight heats. Time, 3:19 and 3:14. The only mishap occurring during the sport was the upsetting of Mr. Hand's sulky in his attempting to turn around, throwing Mr. H. out, but not injuring either himself, sulky or horse. Campbell's Club House adjacent to the track was liberally patronized by the crowd.

A Want.

It is repeatedly suggested that the names of the streets be painted on the corners of the same, so that strangers arriving in our city may have some guide to direct them. Even some of our "oldest inhabitants" are now unable to tell the name and location of all our streets so rapid has been the growth of the place the past few years. Let the streets be numbered also, say we.

A GRAND Re-Union of the Runyon families of Plainfield and vicinity occurred last Friday in the beautiful woods at the foot of the mountains on the homestead farm of Enos Runyon, near Dunellen. There were present some 150 persons, many of whom were aged people, including Ephraim Vail and his consort aged respectively 88 and 80 years of age. The day was pleasantly spent in picnicing, feasting, singing, recounting reminiscences of youth, &c.

THE Grand Summer Night's Concert held in the Congregational Church last Monday evening, was a really fine affair. Although the audience was not as large as it should have been, those who were present went away highly pleased with the entertainment. The organ overture, "Pearl of Bagdad," was well rendered by our young friend, Mr. Lewis A. Moore. Madame Salvotti and Wm. Morgan are artists of no mean reputation, and they, with the splendid combination accompanying them should have been more liberally patronized by our Plainfield public.

THE Fifth Annual Picnic of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society will take place at Vail's Grove, on Thursday, August 3d, and promises to be the most enjoyable affair of the season. Tickets, 25 cents. Stages to and from the grove from corner of 4th and Liberty Streets.

MR. WHITE, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has purchased the John Dunham estate on Plainfield Avenue consisting of 16 acres, and will at once commence the erection of a fine dwelling house. Mulford & Bacon perfected the sale.

MR. JOHN EMMERSON, the livery man, with his usual generosity has started one of his former workmen, Farley, in the hack business, providing him a horse and wagon for that purpose. Parties desiring the services of a competent driver will find Farley that kind of a hackman.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

I perceive by your last week's paper that the question of the right of the public to the tract of land familiarly known as "Dow's Grove" is discussed at some length, and the statement appears that "the Grove belongs to the City of Plainfield as an original owner so gave it and made and recorded a deed to that effect in Essex county many years ago." If that statement were true there would be no question as to whether the "Park" is private property or a public Park. But that statement is erroneous. Thomas B. Stillman, with three other gentlemen did, some 20 odd years ago, purchase some land in Plainfield, including the Grove in question, and for the greater convenience in making conveyances to purchasers, the three gentlemen agreed that Mr. Stillman should hold the title and make the deeds himself, and being a gentleman familiar with engineering, the plotting and mapping of the land was left entirely to him, and in the map of the tract made under his direction the tract of land known as the "Grove" was designated by representation of trees and marked "Park". That map was duly filed in the Clerk's office of Essex county.

I am informed that none of the three joint-owners of the "Park" ever acquiesced in relinquishing their right to that grove or consented to its dedication to the public, nor did Mr. Stillman ever consult any of them as to any dedication of the same to public uses, nor were they aware until very recently that the public claimed the grove to be public property.

From all the information I have been able to glean, the only solitary circumstance upon which reliance is had to sustain the dedication to public uses of that "Grove," is the single one of designating it on the map as "Park", and filing the map. So far as I have heard, not a single human being can say he has ever heard Mr. Stillman or any of the joint owners say that the tract of land in question was intended to be a public park.

I am not prepared to say that the mere making of that "Map" with "Park" delineated upon it and filing it, is not a dedication, nor I apprehend will any one say that it is a dedication. It is a matter of intention purely as I understand it; and when I learn that Thomas B. Stillman more than twenty years ago conveyed this same spot of ground to E. Dean Dow as private property, and got paid for it as private property, and covenanted that he had done no act whereby the title to the same could be charged or defeated, and knowing the clear head and honest purposes of Mr. Stillman, as I knew them, I must conclude that the delineation by him of "Park" on that map, and his filing it, was not meant by him as evidence of an intention to give up his ownership of it and donate it to the public. Surely Thomas B. Stillman knew better in 1855 what his intentions were two years before, than people who are living twenty years later can possibly know them.

In this question the public will of course take sides against the owners, because a park is a valuable acquisition to our beautiful city, but this is a question of private rights and law. If the purchaser of this beautiful grove has bought and paid for it, surely our people would not rudely wrest it from him without process of law; because, forsooth, "a park is a handy thing to have in a city." I may add, in conclusion, that the grove has been fenced as any other private property, until vandalism lately stripped the fencing away, and that whenever the public wished to use it for picnics or other public uses, consent was invariably asked of the persons holding the title.

The public had best not to make up its mind until the evidence is all in. R.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

For some two weeks past I have heard on the streets and in public places considerable talk about a Park, better known as Stillman's Grove, situated just below the Park House. On Saturday last I had the pleasure of witnessing a rather pleasing scene, although somewhat ludicrous. You can easily imagine the position of one of the Fathers of our noble city placing himself, with white vest, a starched boiled shirt on, in the position of a laborer, with shovel in hand, tearing up the bowels of mother earth with all of the ferocity of a wild animal of the forest who seeks in the earth for its daily food; and while the perspiration was coursing down that noble brow, unmindful of the danger laying in wait for him, when all of a sudden in the distant appeared the noble chief, not the chief of the sioux nation, Sitting Bull, but the guardian protector of laws and ordinances, and in tones of authority and power, crying, "Desist, noble father, thou must not destroy the property of the city in such a reckless manner." The noble city father, with countenance serene and voice as calm as crickets on a cake of ice, asked, "By whose authority dost thou command?" "By that inevitable power, the Mayor!" Our noble father said, "Chief of thy noble tribe if such be the mandates of superior authority, unwilling I submit; but first I must know, dost thou arrest me?" The brave chief said in tones as deep as one could who recognizes his authority, "I do!" The noble father then said, "Brave chief thou needs not lift my scalp—I go, and to thy orders I do submit." The noble father again said, "Brave chief, the day is warm, and the labor I have performed has overdone me; wilt thou accept my hospitality and ride with me?" The brave chief, whose countenance was as calm and serene as a marigold in the month of August, said, "Noble father, thy magnanimity is great, I will; for I, too, feel the perplexities and labor of this day." And thusly the father and the brave chief sat side by side conversing in low and pensive tones until the outer portion of the contested spot was reached, when the great father said to one of his supes, "alight; replace those rails at the gate-way, to keep all intruders out." "Noble father, I do thy bidding." Just at that moment the rumbling of a carriage was heard in the distance, and lo! and behold, who should appear but the inevitable Mayor, with head erect, eyes aglare, and hair flying in the breeze like canebreak on the dismal swamp, crying, "brave chief, release the prisoner; lift not a single hair from his hoary scalp; thy orders from me are revoked; and now, brave chief and noble father, let us smoke the pipe of peace." But this was not the last part of the frightful scene. The long lost Samuel, who acts the part of a special brave, came flying down in a butcher's cart (to carry off the dead I suppose) crying, "Great reformers, is the battle over? where shall I carry the dead and bury the wounded?" And these last remarks, uttered by the long lost Samuel, greatly eased the feelings of your correspondent, for he knew he would not be counted amongst the dead or wounded; but felt very hungry, not so very hungry for a park as some of those parties do who propose to run this city into a lawsuit that will cost them not less than $1,000 to $2,000, and then gain nothing in the end. That is the kind of reform the citizens of Plainfield are not hankering for at the present time.

Now, Messrs. Editors, would it not be much better and more consistent for those whose appetites crave a park, to allay the knawings within, by puting their hands in their own pockets and saying, "here is my heart, here is my hand, and here is my money to join this band," and go to work in a proper manner and not throw the expense on the city? That would be a class of reformers that would be of some honor to the place. And now, Messrs. Editors, in coasting around to find whence this malarial disease sprang from, I find the seat of it is located for its head down in the low lands so lonesome and so low, by the side of Cedar Brook, whose placid waters flow gently down and empty into the great body of waters—Brooklyn Pond. Now, if this great low-land chief is so hungry for a park, why don't he magnanimously lay out and donate to this beautiful city a Park? I understand he is a large possessor of the above described property, and it would do him great credit to hand down to posterity a beautiful Park, dotted here and there with lovely Islands, where the poor, weary and footsore pedestrian could go and quench his thirst and bathe his blood-stained heel.—This would be magnanimity of a much higher strata than to run the city into debt.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

The action of the Common Council with reference to the Park question is certainly a cause for general gratification. The matter of a Park is one that interests us all; we have thought too little of it, probably because our lots and lawns are at present large; but as our city grows value of lots increase, hence they will be made smaller. It will then be that we will see the need of a public breathing space. Think how much the mortality of the city of New York would have been decreased during the recent heated term had the poor possessed frequent small Parks. I do not suppose that there is a taxpayer in our city that desires to secure the plot by might, but honorable means; if it was the intention of the benevolent Thos. B. Stillman that the Park should be the property of the town in which he took so much pride, then we should possess it; if it is legally and morally the property of the Trustees of the Seminary then they should have it. At all events it seems that the city have rights in the property, so let it be tried, and let our Council be sustained in this their efforts to establish our rights. Jefferson Park, of Elizabeth, is almost the counterpart of this disputed plot; it is wooded with a natural growth of oak though which broad paths have been laid, making it a source of value to the city that can be hardly over estimated. This will certainly be the case with our Park; assuredly it will redound to the credit of the Council that may secure it for our people.

TAXES, TAXES!

For "The Constitutionalist."

About the Park.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

By what authority has the public to claim the Park? Let us reason together on the subject. As we understand the matter Thomas B. Stillman, some over twenty years since, purchased the lands whereon the Park is now located. After this purchase, he and Rogers made a further purchase, they becoming partners in these lands, formerly known as the "Simeon Randolph Farm," then lying southeast of Fifth Street containing about 60 or 80 acres of land. At the time this was considered a poor and worn out farm and of not any great value. They thinking they could see money in it, purchased the whole farm for a few thousand dollars; and now what do they do? They go to work and lay it out into blocks and streets, set trees on the streets, mark off one square or block and mark that "Park," lay off another square and mark that "S. D. B. Cemetery," and donate this in order that they might remove the old grounds out of their way of streets and building lots, the old ground being at the time about where Mr. Hoadley now resides on Seventh Street. They having got their town plot arranged, they cause a map to be made, giving name of streets, park, &c., and had said map filed in the County Clerk's office; at the same time had a lot of maps struck off for the benefit of purchasers, thus putting their land in market, with streets, park, &c., as an inducement to purchasers to purchase, build and make permanent homes. The people from various States and country have came to our town and purchased on said plot, making the old worthless farm a beautiful city, thus advancing the value of these lands to the great profit of the owners, as well as making beautiful homes for themselves. The Park, upon which the dispute now arises, cost the original owners only a few hundred dollars; but now is worth more thousands than hundreds when they set it apart for a Park, and other lots now owned by Rogers is worth more than the whole farm cost at their purchase twenty odd years ago. Now, why was this map made and put upon the county record? but to represent it as a permanent thing, and an inducement to the public to purchase on said plot. The people having settled on said plot with these inducements, who has power to deprive them of the privileges they have thus purchased? Can they, the original mappers, or any one else now say that we will close up these streets, build on them, or use this Park for building purposes, or use it for a slaughter-yard or any other purpose to the disfavor or detri*ment to the residents of this plot or map?* I cannot learn that any money was ever paid over to any party for the transfer of this Park since the make of said map; but doubtless it was transferred to the Trustees of the Seminary, as the Cemetery ground was to the Trustees of the Seventh Day Baptist Church, that somebody should have the oversight and control from trespass, &c., as there were no city authorities at that time. But suppose from some technicality in the transaction the law would allow these parties to sell and use this Park for other purposes than a Park, would that be right on their part? We know that T. B. Stillman, the originator, desired that for a Park. Would it not be equivalent to denying a note because it had outlawed or pleading the baby-act after a young man became of age? It has been said that "the love of money is the root of all evil;" and again it has been said that "honesty is the best policy."—There seems to be two sides to this question and we hear men talk foolishly on both sides. Better keep cool and be just.

OUTSIDER.

PROCEEDINGS COMMON COUNCIL.

FRIDAY EV'G, July 21, 1876.

SPECIAL MEETING.

Met pursuant to call of President.

Pres. Mr. Smith in chair.

All present except Mr. French.

On motion of Mr. Thorn, reading of minutes dispensed with.

Mr. Thorn, from Com. on Laws and Ords., presented report from Corp. Counsel in reference to matter of plot of ground on 8th, 9th, Union and Dunham Sts., as follows:

In the matter of the relation of the city to that certain block or tract of land lying between 8th and 9th sts., and Union and Dunham sts., as laid down the "Map of Building Lots in Plainfield, N. J.," owned by T. B. Stillman, Clark Rogers, Nathan Rogers and Nicholas Rogers, and designated by the name of "Park," I have the honor to report that by an examination of the records and files in the office of the Register of Deeds of Essex County, it appears that the gentlemen above named being the purchasers of the lands shown on said map agreed, for convenience sake, that the title of said lands should be taken in the name of said T. B. Stillman, which agreement is dated April 6th, 1853, and refers to the map then made, and which said map was duly filed in the office of the Register of Deeds of Essex County on the 20th day of April, 1853, that said lands are laid out on said map and lettered in Blocks and the Blocks laid out and numbered as Building Lots, with the exception of Blocks G., H., I., K., marked respec*tively on said map, Nicholas Rogers,* T. B. Stillman, Clark Rogers and Nathan Rogers, and also excepting Block Q, which is laid out and named on said Map as a "Park;" and it further appears that sales of lots were and have for a long time since the filing of said map been made by reference thereto. These acts amount to a dedication of the plot so delineated and marked "Park," to the use of the public. Our Supreme Court has declared that "when the owner of lands procures them to be laid off in blocks, streets and squares, and has a map made on which are delineated such streets and squares, which he files among the public records of the County, and by reference to which he makes sales of lots, the streets and squares as laid down on such map become thereby dedicated to public use; and that the word "square" as a term of dedication, indicates a public use, either for purposes of a free passage, or to be ornamented for grounds of pleasure, amusement, recreation or health." Besides it appears from statements of reliable persons intimate with the late T. B. Stillman, in whom the title to the said park was vested, that at the time of filing the said map, and for some time after it was his intention that the lot delineated as a "park" on said map should be used and dedicated as a public park, and as expressed by him.

Property so dedicated cannot be re-taken by the owner, nor can the dedication be revoked. It also appears by the records that in the month of August, 1854, three years and three months after the filing of said map, that E. Dean Dow purchased of T. B. Stillman the lot Q designated as a Park, deed dated August 1, 1854, and of Nathan Rogers, Block K., known as the Seminary Lot, deed dated August 17th, 1856, both deeds being recorded October 1st, 1856, and the fact is I am informed that the public have not been excluded from said Park until recently, when the said Park was enclosed by an impassable high picket fence, I am therefore of the opinion that the city of Plainfield is legally justified in claiming the said Park for public use as such.

On motion, received and ordered filed.

Mr. Thorn presented report of Com. on Laws and Ords. on petition of J. R. Martine and others, as follows:

Your Committee to whom was referred the peti*tion of J. R. Martine, Wm. Swain, Rufus K. Case* and others, in relation to the plot of land lying between and bounded by 8th St., College Place, 9th and Union Sts., known as a Park, respectfully report that they have, with the assistance of the Corporation Counsel, investigated the subject, and are of the opinion that the said plot of land was dedicated by the owners thereof to the public as a park, in 1853, and have taken the opinion of the Counsel to the Corporation on the matter which is herewith annexed, and made a part hereof, and your Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Mayor be and is hereby authorized and requested to open said Park to public use, and to prevent any and all trespasses upon the same incompatible with the free and uninterrupted use of the same by the public as a public park, and further that the Corporation Counsel be and is hereby instructed to take such measures as are necessary to secure, for the city the undisputed possession of the said Park.

Mr. Brown moved report be received and ordered filed, and the res. adopted.

Pres. Mr. Smith called Mr. Thorn to the chair and discussed at some length upon the res. He said he was not in favor of the city interfering with this matter, stating that in all probability it would terminate in a lawsuit against the city and they be made to pay the costs—anywhere from $100 to $1,000; he further stated the city's finances are in a very low condition, and thought it not advisable to commence any lawsuits at present, or the outlay of monies for which, in his opinion, was mere chance; he had also been informed that there was nothing in the archives of the city that secured them that the city had any deed for the property, no more than a map drawn or gotten up by Thos. B. Stillman, as a public road or park; he said that notwithstanding the filing of said map the city had no claims upon the Park or the streets laid down on said map, from the fact that the city had never accepted the cession, or otherwise the Streets or Park; therefore, it being a private map it could only effect the parties interested in it, and they should obtain their redress through the Courts.

Messrs. Mulford and Tier also objected to the city interfering in any way with this matter.

Mr. Brown remarked, a petition comes before this body signed by some of the best citizens and taxpayers of our city; the petitioners ask us to protect the city's rights; we, as Councilmen, are sworn to transact the business of the city as we would our own. Is there a member of us that would not contend for a matter of $10,000 to $20,000, if we were assured by competent counsel that the claim was a good and justifiable one? This map that represents the park in question, is duly filed in the public records of the county, and according to the decisions of the Supreme Court is a dedication to the public use; further, your Com. on Laws and Ords. have made diligent inquiry and find that the original owners and makers of said map have declared that the said plot was a park never to be built upon. Mr. B. then cited the Hoboken case, which is briefly as follows: About 1804, one Stephens caused a tract of land to be mapped, upon which was represented two public squares and one square; said map was filed in Hudson Co.; after, in 1854, said square was sold to a Methodist church; the city claimed the plot as a public square; a suit ensued which resulted in a victory to the city, compelling the church to be removed, and to day the plot is a public square of the city. Mr. B. claimed that the proposition before us is a simple one and the path of duty clear; he said if the park belongs to this city we should have it; if it belongs to the Trustees of the Seminary they should have the same. We desire only that which is right and proper, and Mr. Pres., in this course, 99 out of 100 of our people would sustain the action of this body; we are the servants of the people, and it is our duty to give them our fullest protection.

Report received and res. adopted, as follows: For—Messrs. Brown, Harris, Ryder, Simpson, Thorn and Voorhees—6; against—Messrs. Mulford, Smith and Tier—3.

Com. on Police reported the following claims correct; P. Breen, $36 34; J. R. Clark, $41 67; Geo. Eaton, $41 67; P. Waters, $41 67; Sam. Randolph, $26 75. On motion same were referred to Aud. Com.

The Aud. Com. reported claims referred to them at last meeting and those of this evening. 21 in all, correct, and warrants ordered drawn for same.

Council then adjourned.

CAUTION!

The undersigned would caution the public against using or sinking driven wells under Nelson W. Green's patent, unless the same are put down by him, as all parties using the same otherwise put down, or sinking such wells will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, he having the exclusive right to sink driven wells in Plainfield. The following is a decision recently rendered by Judge Benedict, of Brooklyn, N. Y.:

"Wm. D. Andrews, owner of a patent granted to Col. Nelson W. Green, for a driven well, sued Thos. A. Carson some time ago to restrain him from the use of the patent in the manufacture of a similar well. The testimony filled over one thousand pages and counsel were over two [illegible] in summing before Judge Benedict in Brooklyn. The patent is worth a million dollars. The well is an air-tight iron tube, driven into the ground until it reaches water-bearing stratum. An air pump is screwed on the top of the tube, and the other end is of steel, made sharp and perforated. Many thousands of the wells are in use. Carson is accused of using a similar well. Counsel for the defence contended that the patent was merely a new plan of more easily reaching the water bearing strata, and could not be held patentable. Judge Benedict held that the idea of forcing water from the earth into a well pit by artificial means was new, but was not patentable, but that the method by which the idea is made available was patentable. He decided that the infringement had been clearly proved.

WISTAR'S BALSAM WILD CHERRY

Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Croup, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Liver Complaint, Pains or Soreness in the Chest or Side, Bleeding at the Lungs, and every affection of the Throat, Lungs and Chest, are speedily and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry which does not dry up a cough and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most remedies, but loosens it, cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

Consumption Can be Cured

by a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials it has received. None genuine unless signed "I. BUTTS" on the wrapper. 50cts. and $1 a bottle; large bottles much the cheaper. SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. Sold by dealers generally.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

A BRAVE BOY.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

There is a little boy I know, his name is David Strong, and though he is not very old his legs are very long; and when he runs a race he goes with such a skip and bound, it really seems as if he hardly ever touched the ground.

He likes to play with smaller boys, for they look up to Dave, and think there never was a boy so nimble and so brave: and when he fights with them and puts his muscles to the test, of course he knows the other side will come off second best.

He's such a braggart, and perhaps there's something in a name, that if a mighty giant in the way of David came, he wouldn't be a bit afraid, not he! it would be fun to hit him with a sling, and so he always carries one.—Indeed, he's quite an arsenal, and so very much enjoys assuming military airs when with the other boys, that those who with a loving glance his future prospects scan are quite decided that he'll be a military man.

Already does a title to the little boy belong, and nothing pleases him so much as to call him "Captain Strong." My! how he straightens up as if gold epaulets he wore, and with a sword was in command of fifty men or more.

In imaginary battles it is easy to be brave, [illegible] when real fighting 's to be done [illegible] cowardly is Dave; who, [illegible] the side of right, is never [illegible] as when he's up to [illegible] ready doing some-[illegible]

Poceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders.

ELIZABETH, July 12, 1876.

The Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union convened at their room in the Court House, Elizabeth, at eleven o'clock, a. m., all the members being present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

There being no report from committees, new business was taken up.

By Freeholder Randolph:

Resolved, That the Elizabeth Freie Zeitung be allowed the same compensation for publishing the last Collector's Report as is allowed other papers in the county.

The yeas and nays being called for the resolution was adopted by the following vote:

Messrs. Ayers (Wm. C.), Briant, Crane, Delvan, Randolph, Runkle, Russell, Ryder, Smith and Winans, in the affirmative, and Messrs. Ayers (Samuel), Baldwin, Iseman, Martine and Pierson in the negative.

By Freeholder Martine:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to report upon the necessity and the probable cost of rebuilding the bridge on Springfield road, near the residence of Ephriam Clark, deceased.

Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee Messrs. Martine, Doty, Devlin, Runkle and Briant.

By Freeholder Winans:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to report to this Board the probable cost and on the necessity of enlargeing the culvert on Pearl St., in the city of Elizabeth, between Race St. and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee Messrs. Winans, Baldwin and Crans.

The County Attorney then being present, Freeholder Baldwin moved that his opinion be heard in relation to the Summit bridge, which was referred to him at the last meeting.

The County Attorney then read his opinion on the matter, and on motion, by Freeholder Randolph, it was received and placed on file.

By Freeholder Briant:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to meet at the Summit on Friday, June 30, 1876, at 11 a. m., to take into consideration the necessity of repairing the iron bridge over the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and building wing walls to the same, and to report to this Board the probable cost.

Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee Messrs. Briant, Runkle, Ryder, [illegible] and Winans.

The three murderers were brothers, named Thelhorn, who had long borne an evil reputation. Two policemen attempted to arrest them for disorderly conduct and one lost his life in the attempt, the other now lying in a critical state. The murderers then rushed to Dawson's tannery, from which they had been discharged, for the purpose of killing the foreman. Not finding him, they fired indiscriminately among the men in the [illegible]. The assistant foreman fell dead and two workmen were wounded, one of whom afterwards died. Then the murderers turned to flee, but the remaining workmen pursued them furiously, striking at them with knives and hurling stones at them. Wounded and bleeding they reached the river, but lost their lives in its waters under the shower of missiles of their pursuers.

A man in Iowa was bitten by a rattlesnake, but the liberal use of a neighbor's whiskey cured him. The next day he was seen walking slowly on the prairie, and looking earnestly for something. He was asked what he was looking for, "For the bite of a snake," was the reply.

An exchange sensibly says: Don't change sides of the walk with a lady when you cross the street. It's an evidence of verdancy. Place a lady on your right hand, whether she will be inside or outside the walk. Then turn to the right, and that will bring you between the lady and persons passing in the opposite direction. This is a short chapter for young gentlemen.

NEW JERSEY
Enamel Paint Company,
RARITAN, NEW JERSEY.
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

BEAUTIFUL & DURABLE
TRADE MARK

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either inside or outside work or boat painting than any other Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use.
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.
Liberal Inducements to Dealers.
And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.

Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price Mist and Sample Color Card, Address,

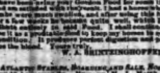
GORDON'S FOOD
FOR
Horses, Cattle and Poultry.



Used in Europe for 12 Years.
Horses fed on this system are always in a good and healthy condition. Cows give as much milk as when fed on the rich Spring grass.

[illegible] BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J., March 14, 1876.—Mr. H. S. Spader—Dear Sir: In reply to your inquiry I have been using your Gordon Food for some time and am satisfied with the result. I had a horse whose [illegible] were much swollen, and after using the food for a few weeks he became quite well, which I attribute entirely to said Food. I shall continue to use it as a profitable food to keep my horses in good condition. It produces perfect digestion and purifies the blood. Yours truly,
W. A. SHINTZINGHOFFER.

POETRY.

MOTHER.

When she undid her hair at night,
About the time of lying down,
She came and knelt; I was so small,
There in my bed, her curls did fall
All over me, bright gold and brown.

I fell asleep amid her prayers,
Her fair young face (far off it seems),
Her girlish voice, her kisses sweet,
The patter of her busy feet,
Passed with me into charming dreams.

And when I woke at merry morn,
Through her gold hair I saw the sun
Flame strong, shine glad and glorify
The great, good world. O, ne'er can I
Forget the words, "My darling one!"

Ah! checkered years since then have crept
Past her and me, and we have known
Some sorrow and much tempered joy;
Far into manhood stands her boy,
And her gold hair snow white is grown.

The world is changed by slow degrees;
And all old days recede, alas!
So much of trouble have the new,
Those rare, far joys grow dim seen through
Sad times, as through a darkened glass.

But just this morning when I woke
How lovingly my lips were kissed!
How chaste and clear the sunlight shone
On mother's hair, like gold dust sown
Athwart thin clouds of silver mist!

From Boston True Flag.

NEAR AND FAR.

The treasure that around us lies,
Neglected glitters at our feet;
We backward turn with longing eyes
To things we deem more sweet.

The sunny past to fancy seems
The dearer, since so far away;
Recalling it in idle dreams,
We think 'twas yesterday.

Yet while with vain regret we sigh,
Unsought, unheeded, blessings fall;
So near our grasp their beauties lie,
They seem the least of all.

So to our fair estates in Spain,
Those castles in the air, we fly,
From these a transient joy to gain,
Where rose-embowered they lie.

Meantime, while far away we seek
For dear delights, a little hand
Steals in our own, and Rosy Cheek
Begs tales of fairy land.

While the fair mother gently vies
With him to gain the fond caress
Reflecting soon within her eyes
Our pensive happiness.

Sad thoughts and foolish fancies, go!
No more we need to search for bliss;
While wife and children love us so,
The dearest place is this.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

A MIDNIGHT ADVENTURE.

Some years ago, while journeying through the central part of Ohio, a terrible snow storm occurred, which so obstructed the road that several passengers, including myself, were obliged to find accommodations in a small wooden tavern, situated near by. After satisfying the "inner man" with a warm supper we all congregated around the bar room fire, and soon were engaged in smoking, telling stories, and enjoying ourselves generally.

Among us was a middle-aged gentleman, apparently a merchant, who remained a silent listener to the conversation the first part of the evening. But soon our vocabulary of stories was exhausted, and the gentleman was politely invited to revive the drooping conversation by telling a story.—He readily accepted the invitation, and told the following, which I give the reader as near as my memory will permit:

About twenty years ago (he began) I was connected with a wealthy firm in St. Louis, and desiring to visit New Orleans, was entrusted with a considerable sum of money by my employers to be conveyed with all possible haste to a New Orleans merchant.

Early in the morning I got on board the boat, and leaned listlessly over the railing, watching the inhabitants as they went forth to their various occupations. I had not remained in that position long, before the steamer moved slowly away from the pier, and soon the city was entirely lost to view.

During the day nothing transpired to render the voyage disagreeable, and as the shadow of night began to hover over the water, I repaired to the saloon, where several gentlemen were engaged in a rather stormy discussion on politics. Soon I became entangled along with the rest, and gave my particular views on political subjects.

While conversing, I thoughtlessly mentioned the fact of my having a large sum of money in my possession. Nothing further was said about it at the time, however, but the thought flashed across my mind that in a crowd of desperate and unprincipled men, as were my associates, it was not the place to tell such a secret, which kept me rather backward in my conversation during the remainder of the evening. I retired soon after, fully resolved to be more prudent in the future.

The next day I made the acquaintance of a gentleman who professed to be a Methodist clergyman. He gave me several tracts and soon we entered into a conversation that resulted in quite a friendly intimacy.—He appeared to be well versed in his profession, and altogether a very agreeable companion. After conversation on the various topics of the day, the conversation naturally turned to the previous evening's discussion. Not being very well pleased with what had occurred at that time, I attempted to change the subject, but was prevented by my friend remarking:

"You were very indiscreet, Mr. R——, in revealing the fact that you had money in your possession. There are men on this boat who would not hesitate to rob you, if an opportunity presented; therefore I advise you to be more careful hereafter."

I thanked him for his kind advice and assured him that I intended to keep aloof from all suspicious individuals.

To this he made no reply, but rose from his seat, and with cane in hand walked leisurely away to his room, leaving me to my own reflections, which were that I had a good companion and a valuable friend in the preacher.

On the journey I made the acquaintance of several gentlemen, but none that I valued so much as the clergyman. Nothing occurred of note after and we arrived late in the afternoon at New Orleans. Not being very well acquainted in the city, my friend offered to conduct me to a hotel where my expenses would not be very heavy, and as I wished to spend as little money as possible, I thankfully accepted his company, and we walked up the street several blocks, when he gave me the proper direction to take, while he was obliged to go another way.

After parting with him, I wended my way to the hotel, which was situated a little off from the busy thoroughfare. It was a large building, and had a very old and dingy appearance, and, in fact, did not look very inviting to the traveler, but as I expected to stay only a short time, I concluded to accept the accommodations, as they were much cheaper than could be found elsewhere.

I entered the bar-room, and after registering my name and eating a little supper, I asked to be shown to my room, and was conducted up a flight of rickety old stairs to a small, square room, where my guard left me. Proceeding to examine the apartment, I found that it contained one small window, which looked out on a dark alley. The furniture consisted of a bed, a couple of chairs, a stand, and a heavy oaken cupboard, some three feet high and about six feet long, with strong side doors. The appearance of the room did not disperse the gloomy feelings of distrust that I experienced when I first saw the building. However, I determined to make the best of it, now I was there.

I noticed before coming to the room, that thick masses of clouds were gradually gathering over the city, and distant rumbling of thunder, with sharp, quick flashes of lightning that quivered across the western horizon denoted an approaching storm.

Being very tired, I immediately disrobed and jumped into bed, and was fast falling into a dreamless slumber, when a low, scratching sound, attracted my attention. It seemed to come from some place in the room, but I could not tell exactly where. My nervousness increased as the sound continued, till I determined to ferret out the cause of the disturbance. I jumped from the bed, and looked cautiously around the room for some time, but could discover nothing. The sound had entirely subsided and nothing could be heard save the wind, which whistled mournfully by the windows, or the distant rumbling of the thunder which denoted the approaching storm.

At last I concluded it must be the window blind or some such object, driven by the force of the wind against the house. Arriving at this conclusion I again jumped into bed, and lay for a long time, vainly endeavoring to sleep; but finding it impossible I busied myself watching the expiring flames of the taper till a stray gust of wind whistled through the broken window and extinguished the object of my attention.

The storm, which had long been threatening, now burst forth in all its grandeur. The rolling thunder grew louder at each successive report, vivid flashes of lightning darted across the heavens, illuminating the room with the lurid flame, so that every object was plainly visible; the next moment pitch darkness followed so impenetrable that the most prominent objects were hidden to the eye. While lying there looking out from under the bed clothes, trembling with fear, the scratching sound commenced with renewed vigor, making the room sound with the peculiar noise which had long before annoyed me.

Large drops of perspiration stood upon my brow, and rising to a sitting posture, I tremblingly gazed out into the darkness, trying to discern the objects as the lightning flashes penetrated the room.

At that moment a livid sheet of radiance passed before me, and in an instant I beheld a man's arm protruding from the cupboard, while the hand clasped, as if for support, the strong oaken door.

I realized my situation immediately, and springing from the bed I grasped a heavy boot which lay near, and brandishing it over my head breathlessly waited for the lightning to appear. It was but a moment ere a livid flame quivered through the air, revealing the head and shoulders of as villainous a looking man as I ever before beheld. The left hand supported a creeping form, while the other clutched tightly a large revolver. The hand was uplifted, and our eyes met. As quick as thought I bounded straight for the rascal, yelling—

"You infernal villain!"

The only answer I received was the sharp crack of a pistol, the ball whistling by and lodging in the wall near me. The next moment the heavy boot came down with a terrible crash on the rascal's face, making him yell something I was unable to understand, for a loud peal of thunder drowned the sentence.

He fiercely struggled to free himself from the cupboard, but by my repeating the blow he was obliged to push back into his hiding place.

With a movement certainly commendable, I closed the heavy doors, and grasped the oaken structure by the top and pulled it over on its face, and sprung upon it, while the cursing which came from within could scarcely be heard above the raging storm, which kept up an incessant roar.

Undressed and trembling with fear, for one long hour I sat yelling at the top of my voice for assistance, but was unheard on account of the raging elements without.

At last the storm gradually abated, and my cries were heard by the Irish chambermaid who came running into the room, but on seeing me in such an unenviable position she frantically ran down stairs, yelling, "murder," with all the vehemence her vigorous lungs would permit. This brought to my room a crowd of excited individuals, all eager to find out the cause of the disturbance.

I explained the case as well as my shattered faculties would permit, but was frequently interrupted by the blasphemous harangue which the robber was holding forth within the cupboard.

After concluding, I jumped from my seat and stood a few steps away, breathlessly waiting while my friends, by the aid of a dim lantern, dragged forth hatless and bleeding, his looks disheveled, and his face all bespattered with blood, the would-be murderer—my trusted friend, the preacher.

I recognized his face immediately, and springing back, threw up my hands in astonishment. The villain gazed steadily at me with a sickly smile, which said plainer than words that I was not the first victim of misplaced confidence.

A person was immediately sent to inform the authorities, who took him into custody, and afterwards sentenced him to a long term in the State penitentiary.

After the excitement had somewhat abated, I retired and slept soundly for the rest of the night, and was permitted to depart the next morning, thankful that I had escaped unharmed from the murderous rascal, and fully resolved never again to place confidence in an entire stranger, whatever profession he might represent.

PRAISE YOUR WIFE.

Andrew Lee had come from his shop, where he had worked all day, tired and out of spirits, came home to his wife, who was also out of spirits.

"A smiling wife and a cheerful home—a paradise it would be!" said Andrew to himself, as he turned his eye from the clouded face of Mrs. Lee and sat down with knitted brows and moody aspect.

Not a word was spoken by either. Mrs. Lee was getting supper, and she moved about with a weary step.

"Come," she said at last, with a side glance at her husband.

There was invitation in the word only; none in the voice of Mrs. Lee.

Andrew arose and went to the table. He was tempted to speak an angry word, but controlled himself and kept silent. He could find no fault with the chop and the home-made bread, nor the fragrant tea. They would have cheered his inward man, if there had been only a gleam of sunshine on the face of his wife. He noticed that she did not eat.

"Are you not well, Mary?" The words were on his lips, but he did not utter them, for the face of his wife looked so repellent that he feared an irritating reply. And so, in moody silence, the twain sat together until Andrew had finished his supper.

As he pushed his chair back, his wife arose and commenced clearing off the table.

"This is a purgatory!" said Lee to himself, as he commenced walking the floor of their breakfast room, with his hands thrust in his trousers' pockets and his chin almost touched his breast.

After removing all the dishes and taking them into the kitchen, Mrs. Lee spread a green cover on the table, and placing a fresh trimmed lamp thereon, went out and shut the door after her, leaving her husband alone with his unpleasant feelings. He took a long deep breath as she did so, paused in his walk, stood still for some moments, and then drawing a paper from his pocket, sat down by the table, opened the sheet, commenced reading. Singularly enough, the words upon which his eyes rested were, "Praise your wife." They rather tended to increase the disturbance of mind from which he was suffering.

"I should like to find some occasion for praising mine." How quickly his thoughts expressed that ill-natured sentiment. But his eyes were on the page before him, and he read on.

"Praise your wife, man; for pity's sake give her a little encouragement; it won't hurt her."

Andrew Lee raised his eyes from the paper and muttered: "O, yes; that's all very well. Praise is cheap enough; but praise her for what? For being sullen, and making your home the most disagreeable place in the world?" His eyes fell again to the paper.

"She has made your home comfortable, your heart bright and shining, your food agreeable; for pity's sake tell her you thank her, if nothing more; she don't expect it; it will make her eyes open wider than they have for 10 years; but it will do her good for all that, and you, too."

It seemed to Andrew as if this sentence was written for him, and just for the occasion. It was a complete answer to his question, "Praise her for what?" and he felt it also as a rebuke. He read no further, for thought came too busy and in a new direction. Memory was convicting him of injustice to his wife; she had always made his home as comfortable as her hands could make it, and had he offered the light return of praise or commendation? Had he ever told her of the satisfaction he had known or the comfort he had experienced? He was not able to recall the time or occasion; as he thought thus, Mrs. Lee came in from the kitchen, and taking her work-basket from the closet, placed it on the table, and sitting down without speaking, began to sew. Mr. Lee glanced almost stealthily at the work in her hands and saw that it was the bosom of a shirt which she was stitching neatly. He knew that it was for him that she was at work.

"Praise your wife." The words were before the eyes of his mind and he could not look away from them; but he was not ready for this yet. He still felt moody and unforgiving. The expression on his wife's face he interpreted to mean ill-nature, and with ill-nature he had no patience. His eyes fell upon the newspaper that lay spread out before him and he read the sentence:

"A kind, cheerful word, spoken in a gloomy house, is the little rift in the cloud that lets the sunshine through."

Lee struggled with himself a while longer; his own ill-nature had to be conquered first; his moody, accusing spirit had to be subdued. He thought of many things to say, yet he feared to say them lest his wife should meet his advances with a cold rebuff. At last, leaning toward her and taking hold of the linen bosom upon which she was at work, he said, in a voice carefully modulated with kindness: "You are doing this work very beautifully, Mary."

Mrs. Lee made no reply; but her husband did not fail to observe that she lost almost instantly that rigid erectness with which she had been sitting, and that the motion of her needle had ceased.

"My shirts are better made and whiter than those of any other man in the shop," said Lee, encouraged to go on.

"Are they?" Mrs. Lee's voice was low, and had in it a slight huskiness; she did not turn her face, but her husband saw that she leaned a little toward him. He had broken the ice of reserve, and all was easy now.—His hand was among the clouds and a few feeble rays were already struggling through the rift it had made.

"Yes, Mary," he answered, softly; "and I've heard it said more than once what a good wife Andrew Lee must have."

Mrs. Lee turned her face toward her husband. There was a light in it and a light in her eye; but there was something in the expression of the countenance that a little puzzled him.

"Do you think so?" she asked, quite soberly.

"What a question!" ejaculated Andrew Lee, starting up, and going round to the side of the table where she was sitting. "What a question, Mary!" he replied, as he stood before her.

"Do you?" It was all she said.

"Yes, darling," was his warmly spoken answer, and he stooped down and kissed her. "How strange that you should ask me such a question?"

"If you would only tell me so now and then, Andrew, it would do me good."

Mrs. Lee arose, and leaning her face against the manly breast of her husband, stood and wept.

What a strong light broke in upon the mind of Andrew Lee; he had never given his wife even the small reward of praise for all the loving interest she had manifested daily, until doubt of his love had entered her soul and made the light all around her thick darkness. No wonder that her face grew clouded, nor what he considered moodishness and ill-nature took possession of her spirit.

"You are good and true, Mary, my own dear wife; I am proud of you—I love you, and my first desire is for your happiness. O, if I always see your face in sunshine, my home would be the dearest place on earth."

"How precious to me are your words of love and praise, Andrew," said Mrs. Lee, smiling up through her tears into his face. "With them in my ears my heart can never lie in shadow."

How easy had been the work for Andrew Lee. He had swept his hand across the cloudy horizon, and now the bright sunshine was streaming and flooding that home with joy and beauty.

WANTED,

BARGAINS IN REAL ESTATE.

He sauntered into the office of a Broad Street real estate broker, last week, and inquired blandly of the clerk if the "head man was in." The clerk glanced up at the visitor, and noticed that he didn't present much of the appearance of a capitalist. He wore no overcoat, and the thin frock coat which he had on was buttoned tightly across his breast to reinforce a Canal Street dirty shirt-hider. His hat, a silk tile of seven summer's varied experiences, was cocked jauntily over his left eye, a much-chewed cigar stump protruded from one corner of his mouth, and both of his hands were thrust deeply in his pockets.

"The boss ain't in," said the clerk, shortly.

"Well," remarked the visitor, in a serene voice, as he carefully parted his coat-tails, and settled down in an arm-chair, "I wanted to see your employer, young man, but you being his confidential secretary, I suppose that I can communicate my business to you."

The stranger evidently understood human nature, and the flattering title he gave the "young man" took well.

"Do you want to rent a house?" inquired the clerk, considerably softened, and laying aside the pen with which he was writing to a young lady in Roseville.

"No responded the stranger, "I don't want to rent a house. I am (here his voice lowered to a confidential tone) I am on the buy. I observed on my entrance, young man, that you was not prepossessed, as it were, with my appearance, but when you grow older you will learn that appearances are very deceitful. Millionaires often hide their opulence under an unpretending guise; in fact it's not necessary for a man of large means to wear good clothes. It's only your impecunious counter-jumpers and such people who have to keep up appearances by personal adornment. Now, I won't say that I'm a millionaire, but I come mighty near it, and I have my thousands by letting people believe I wasn't worth a cent."

The stranger crossed his legs, and, fixing his eye on a fragment of lunch lying upon the desk, resumed:

"What I consider the best investment now for a man with plenty of ready cash is available real estate. It's down, and ordinary people can't touch it with a forty-foot pole. You don't have many bargains now?"

The clerk confessed that bargains in real estate were as scarce as angels' visits.

"I know it," continued the stranger, rubbing his knee; "I watch the thing close, and take all the bearings. Now I know you have any amount of real estate to trade or sell. Ain't I right?"

The clerk again testified to the correctness of the stranger's surmise.

"Just so," said the stranger, in a confident tone; "now I'm coming to business. I want to know how I can place $50,000 to advantage, and your firm is just the firm I want to do it for me. I want unencumbered real estate which I can handle easily, you know, and won't have to keep if I don't want to; $50,000, I said, but I won't balk at $75,000 or a $100,000 with a good inducement."

The stranger threw himself back in his chair, and looked benevolently at the clerk, who looked at the stranger in a puzzled way and didn't reply for some time. Finally he managed to say:

"I couldn't say exactly what properties we have; if you could call when my employer is in, he could talk to you about a sale. Couldn't you come in in the morning?"

"O, yes," replied the stranger, as he rose stiffly from the chair; "there's plenty of time, and I'm in no hurry. Your employer has been recommended to me, and I am determined to make my bargains with him. By the way, young man," he continued, nonchalantly, after a prolonged investigation of his trowsers pockets, "I think I have left my wallet at the hotel, and, being obliged to take the next train for Elizabeth, require some small change. Of course you have a fifty cent note about you?"

The clerk blushed, and confessed that he had only ten cents in change.

"Ten cents—hum!" mused the capitalist; "ten and twenty is thirty—that's enough change for fare; just give me the ten," and he pocketed the note, gave a hitch to his coat collar, said he'd be at the office at ten, sharp, the next morning, and walked out, stopping for a moment to abstract a peanut from the stand of a vender on the corner.

No extensive bargains in real estate have been reported lately.

"THOSE RACE-HORSE MEN."

Mrs. Crocker loves to read a daily paper. She begins at the name and reads to the last line on the fourth page, skipping nothing.—She hasn't a first-class college education, but it is seldom that any thing printed in the papers is too much for her. She got "stuck" the other day, however, and this is how it happened. There was a report of a horse race, and she began to read it. She got down to where it said "John Jay enters g. g. Dick," and she mused:

"He names g. g., does he? Now what in the world is a g. g.? I have been to races several times, and I never saw a g. g. around there."

She puzzled over it until old Mr. Thompson came over to borrow a few clothes-pins, and she asked him what it could mean.

"John Jay names g. g.," he mused.—"Why that's as plain as day. He names a gray goat, of course, and the name of that gray goat is Dick."

"What is a goat doing at a horse-race?" asked Mrs. Crocker.

"I don't know," he replied; "but John Jay had one there, sure's you're born."

She took the paper and read that James Thomas named b. m. "Troubador," and she wanted to know what on earth that meant.

"That means—that means," he replied, scratching his head, "that means that James Thomas had his big mule there, and that his big mule was named Troubadour."

"I never heard of a mule trotting at a horse-race," she protested.

"But it seems that this was a big mule, and so they let him in," he explained.

The next thing she found was that Peter Black named his b. c. "Nancy" for the 2:40 dash.

"You know what that means, do you?" she asked, as she handed the old man the paper.

"Yes, I do," was the prompt reply. "If I know my business, and I think I do, for I have owned seven horses and eleven sulkys in my time, that means that Peter Black named his black calf for that dash."

"O, pshaw!"

"Very well," Mrs. Crocker. If you knew all about racing, why did you ask me?"

"Do you suppose that I am fool enough to believe that a black calf is named to trot in a horse-race! You are getting to be a fool, Mr. Thompson!"

"I guess not—I guess I know my business."

"You get out of this yard, sir!" she yelled "I don't pretend to know much, but I know more in a minute than you do in fourteen days!"

"Very well, Mrs. Crocker, very well. I was going to borrow some of your clothes-pins, but now I won't—no, hang me, if I do!"

She ran for the hoe and he for the gate, and if any body has wondered over seeing a Crawford woman rushing a bald-headed man along the sidewalk, this article can be taken as an explanation. The man doesn't live who can make old Mrs. Crocker believe that a black calf has anything to do with a race-track.

Democratic Nominations.

For President,
SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
OF NEW YORK.

For Vice President,
THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
OF INDIANA.

THE INDEPENDENT VOTE.

There is a political element in this country, and every year growing stronger, which many party leaders evidently fail to estimate aright.

It is the independent vote, the silently deposited ballots of those thousands of citizens who, caring little for partisanship, support such candidates and measures, be they Democratic or Republican, that promise best to advance the general welfare and maintain the highest standard of official integrity.

That undercurrent of public sentiment has no representative voice in the windy utterances of campaign meetings, street stretched banners do not display it, nor do glittering processions proclaim its presence. Yet it exists, a mighty and increasing power, and not unfrequently upsets the calculations of mercenary aspirants when election results are announced.

The Administration of President Grant is exceedingly unpopular with the impartial masses, and even with partisan Republicans who labored and voted for his re-election. That fact cannot be denied, and the causes for such forfeiture of confidence are numerous and some of them notorious.—However estimable Governor Hayes may be as a man, the placing of him in the Presidential office would be virtually perpetuating the Grant dynasty, with its gross imperfections. Men of independent thought know that and dread the prospect. Being fully convinced that a change is absolutely essential for the country's good, they greet with sincere approval the nomination of Governor Tilden, not because he is a Democrat, but because, on the score of personal character he is in every particular the equal of his opponent, and superior as an able and experienced statesman, coupled with which, his proven reputation as a fearless and thorough reformer of official corruption, marks him, of all men, the best fitted to infuse into the public service that dearest of national boons—HONESTY.

TILDEN FOR PRESIDENT.

The Republican leaders denounce the present Democratic House of Representatives as a meddlesome body.

Great is the chagrin of Grant, Robeson, Belknap, Chandler, Blaine, Morton, Cameron and Company.

They fret with rage, yet quake with fear.

They see the hand writing on the wall. The Democrats of the House by investigating and exposing evil deeds have made a terrible record against the party in power.

It is an awful expose, and, possibly, not yet half told.

Had the House of Representatives been Grant Republicans all would have remained quiet and lovely—not a ripple to disturb Post-traders, Naval Contractors, Stock-jobbing Ambassadors, and Dealers in the Crooked generally.

Fortunately for the people the House is Democratic.

The good work of over-hauling has been commenced. It should be pushed on through every Department of the Government, from the highest to the lowest.

Let dishonesty and corrupt favoritism be driven from existence, and in lieu thereof, integrity and justice made the ruling authority.

To secure that all important result there must be a determined friend of reform inaugurated President, a sworn enemy to official misconduct of every kind.

His name is SAMUEL J. TILDEN.

FIGURES.

There is no argument comparable with that made by figures. They dissolve fine spun political sophistry as sunbeams melt the morning mist.

The naval expenditures by the United States Government for the fourteen years ending June 30th, 1861, were $159,456,839.

The same expenditures for the seven years ending June 30th, 1875, were $160,035,481.

Mark those figures!

They tell a fearful tale!

The Grant Administration in seven years of profound peace spent on the Navy just about as much as it cost the Administrations of Polk, Fillmore, Pierce and Buchanan, during a period of fourteen years.

In other words, the Navy cost under Grant, for the time, one hundred per cent. more than his predecessors paid for similar service.

The comparison is fair, because both periods were free from war.

If ever reform was needed in human affairs, it is at the present time in the expenses of this Government.

It cannot be too quickly nor too rigidly applied.

Reform is the only saving measure.

The receipts of the Centennial Exhibition amount to over $800,000, besides various sums collected from manufacturers, who pay 15 per centum on all goods sold that are manufactured in the Exhibition buildings. Some $40,000 have been received as royalty on the beer and other drinks sold on the grounds. The visitors at the Exposition must have been exceedingly dry, and their patronage of the bar tenders very liberal to run up such a revenue for the commissioners, as the above sum indicates.

REFORM.

It is a matter of astonishment to us, that men like Carl Schurz, Geo. Wm. Curtis and the leaders of the Liberal Republicans, who repudiated Grant and abandoned the Republican party in 1872 on account of his unconstitutional course and the growing corruption of the party, should now proclaim their adherence to Gov. Hayes and their hope for his election. They know, if they know anything, that by no possibility can his election produce a change in the existing state of things in the country. It is conceded that he is not a man of determination and force; that none of the Jackson elements have a place in his character. That he must, in the very nature of things, go into office under the influence, if not under the control, of those who now direct the energies of the Republican party.—Chandler is one of the lights of Grantism; he is now Chairman of the National Republican Committee, having in charge the chief direction of the entire campaign. Will it be pretended that, if Hayes be elected, he will not have a controlling influence in his Administration? Blaine, with a cloud hanging over him, has written to Hayes a congratulatory letter, and Hayes has responded expressing his admiration for Blaine. Already there has rallied around Hayes all the corruption of the Republican party—Babcock, Shepherd, Robeson and the rest. Can it be possible that Gov. Hayes, with the best intentions in the world, can make any headway against this influence? The Angel Gabriel, so beset, would struggle in vain to accomplish his aims; surrounded, crushed, suffocated by such elements, he would in the end fall powerless into the current and be carried away, it might be its unwilling, yet its certain victim.

There is no hope for the country or its institutions without REFORM. The existing state of things, all men agree, must be brought to an end. To ensure Reform, we must take men who have identified themselves with it; who have proved their faith by their works. Gov. Tilden, abandoning his business and devoting his whole attention to his self-imposed duty, broke down and destroyed the "Tweed Ring." Elected Governor, he brought the whole force of his energies against the "Canal Ring," a more extended and powerful organization, and finally crushed it.—He has reduced the taxes of the State, in two years, from $16,000,000 to $8,000,000. Here are tangible fruits, the result of his determination and efforts. What does Gov. Hayes present us as an evidence of his determination to enforce reform? Nothing, but words, in the way of promises. We have not heard that he has ever raised his voice against the ruinous course of his party. Certainly he has performed no act indicating his disposition in that direction.

Fellow citizens, you are to decide this matter; you are to say, by your ballots, whether you will have him to administer the affairs of this Government, for the next four years, who has, by his acts, earned your confidence; or him, whose only sign is his letter of acceptance, bristling with promises vaguely made, sounding well to the ear, only, we fear, to be broken to the hope.

PRIVATE OPINION.

A most disgusting feature of party politics is that of defaming men personally because of their political sentiments.

We note it in the public journals and hear it in private conversation.

It is low bred vulgarity.

A cause that must be defended by the throwing of dirt cannot be clean.

The age of iron-clad tyranny, both political and ecclesiastical, has passed away. Men are no longer to be cursed for opinions sake, but honored for an intelligent and independent exercise of their individual judgments.

Let each and every American citizen impartially think for himself and act accordingly. Let him treat with deserving scorn every thing that would shackle his freedom.

Criticise party measures and public actions as sharply as you please, but respect the sanctity of private opinion.

COUNTY DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the County Democratic Executive Committee, held in the city of Elizabeth, on the 26th of July, 1876, action was favorably taken recommending an early organization of the party throughout the county of Union. The committee believe the formation of Tilden and Hendricks Clubs in the several townships and wards will contribute largely towards securing a more efficient organization of the party than now exists, and to this end they earnestly solicit the co-operation of all Democrats, and all friends of Reform.

In the whole history of our country there never has been a period that so imperatively demanded the bold, vigorous and united action on the part of the Democrats and the honest and independent men of the Republican party, as the present. By the course of the party in power, our once boasted Republic has been brought to the verge of bankruptcy—financially, politically and morally. To avert impending ruin, to stay the sweeping tide of corruption, to restore the honor, credit and character of the Government, requires the sleepless vigilance and untiring energy of every friend of Reform. The National standard-bearers of the Democratic party are men of conceded purity, integrity and ability—the most prominent representatives of Administrative Reform in the country.

The committee desire to leave nothing undone that will promote the harmony and success of the party. The old Jackson spirit is being revived in all sections of the Union. The signs on every hand point to a victory in November. Organize your township and ward clubs. Let all jealousies of the past and all bickerings in the present be disregarded and discountenanced.—Let unity, harmony and good feeling everywhere prevail, and Union county will roll up a triumphant majority for Tilden, Hendricks, Honesty and Reform.

JAMES S. SANFORD,
Chairman Co. Executive Com.
CHARLES A. RYAN, Sec.

BELKNAP.

The Senate sitting as a High Court of Impeachment for the trial of Belknap, have closed their proceedings by acquitting him. We don't know whether to be surprised at this or not. In fact we some time ago ceased to be surprised at anything that was done by the Administration at Washington, or by its supporters. Belknap's guilt was undoubted. He had confessed it himself. The evidence against him was conclusive and yet, by a miserable pretence twenty-five Senators of the United States voted "not guilty." The question of jurisdiction was settled before the Senate proceeded to trial and yet the very men who declared in its favor at that time voted for his acquittal on the ground that it was wanting. Can partisan knavery go further? If the people cannot see through this whole proceeding and resent this outrage on justice, then we may well despair of our country's future.

In a special dispatch from Washington to the New York Times, under date of July 27th, we notice that the present House of Representatives have expended (what the Times would give us to understand as the enormous sum of) $125,000 in fees, mileage, &c., by the thirty-one different Committees, which were appointed to look into the different frauds and thievings of Republican officeholders, such as Belknap, Judge Wylie, Clerk Adams and scores of others. The above amount is contemptuously put under the head of Democratic economy. Just as though thieves shouldn't be tried, because it costs so much. But we would simply and plainly say to our contemporary of the Times and its readers that the amount thus expended has saved four times that amount, which would undoubtedly have been stolen outright had not the honest and law-abiding citizens seen fit to put a stop to it by bringing the guilty to justice. But one of the most guilty of them all (Belknap) has escaped through a very small loop-hole, although the stain and disgrace will forever rest upon his character.

POLITICAL.

A man who votes for Hayes and Cameron in November next, votes for a continuation of the crooked ways of Grant, Belknap, Babcock & Co.

Wm. A. Wheeler, of New York, the Republican candidate for Vice President, was a member of Congress, and on the 3rd of March, 1873, voted for the back pay steal!

Hayes is fifty-four, and Wheeler fifty-seven. Both were originally Democrats and "left the party for the party's good. Both possess more ambition than brains, and have only been kept in position by a number of "blowers and strikers."

We do not read of any accessions to the rank of Hayes from the Democracy, but we daily hear of Republicans, influential in their party, turning their back on it to support Tilden, the Reformer.

The Democratic party never entered into a Presidential campaign with a surer certainty of success. Tilden and Hendrick means reform. The people know it. Hayes and Wheeler means a continuation of Grantism. And the people know that too.

The German Reform Club, of New York, have passed resolutions endorsing Mr. Ottendorfer in his support of Tilden and Hendricks, and saying:

Resolved, That we hereby express our regret at the deplorable position in which Mr. Schurz has placed himself; his action at the Fifth avenue conference having led us to believe that he would appear in the front rank of the reform-loving Germans, in which belief we have been sadly disappointed.

THE WAVERLY EXHIBITION.

The next annual exhibition of the New Jersey Agricultural Society will probably be the best that has ever taken place. Already the grounds of the Society at Waverly are being put in order for the occasion, and by the 18th of September, the opening day of the fair, everything will be in readiness. The grand stand is to be repaired and re painted, the track put in first-class condition, and additional sheds erected for live stock. Among the features of the fair will be a grand tournament, similar to that given last year, the best rider in which will be awarded an elegant silver cup. This will take place on the afternoon of Thursday, the 21st. On the afternoon of the following day, the following testimonials will be given to successful riders: 1st, a handsome silver pitcher; 2d, a beautiful silver goblet; 3d, a costly riding saddle; 4th, handsome spurs and bridle. The newly introduced and exciting game, "Polo," will be played by a party of horsemen, and in turn will be followed by a mustang race, which will be ridden by Mexican and California rancheros. President Grant, his cabinet, Governor Hayes, and possibly Governor Tilden will be in attendance during the week. The United States Centennial Commissioners, including all the foreign exhibitors at the Philadelphia Exhibition, have accepted invitations and will be present. An effort will be made to secure Senator Frelinghuysen as the orator on the opening day.

Next Saturday the newspaper editors of the State have been invited to meet at the Waverly Fair Grounds, where they will be entertained by the Executive Committee of the Society.

WILD WOODS OF NEW JERSEY.

Among the New Jersey agricultural exhibit in Agricultural Hall, at the Centennial, are specimens of all the different kinds of woods growing wild in this State. The list is a long one, and will be quite surprising to most people. It is as follows: White pine, yellow pine, pitch pine, spruce pine, hemlock, black spruce, tamarack, white cedar, white oak, post oak, swamp white oak, yellow oak, chestnut oak, black oak, red oak, pin oak, willow oak, chestnut, black walnut, butternut, white elm, red elm, slippery elm, nettle tree, white ash, black ash, black birch, river birch, yellow birch, beech, tulip tree, poplar, sweet gum, sweet white gum, sour gum, basswood, buttonwood, shag-bark, hickory, pig-nut hickory, butternut hickory, hard-shell hickory, wild cherry, sugar maple, red maple, white maple, ash-leaved maple, dog-wood, holly, American horn-beam, blue or water-beech, hop horn-beam, iron-wood, box, persimmon, mulberry, white mulberry, apple, pear, mountain ash, ailanthus, locust, honey locust, sassafras, weeping willow, common or swamp blueberry, alder, tag alder, button bush, shad-bush.

ELECTORAL VOTE.

Below will be found the number of electoral votes of the different States, altogether numbering three hundred and sixty-nine; leaving one hundred and eighty-five necessary to a choice:

Missouri,	15
Nebraska,	3
Nevada,	3
New Hampshire,	5
New Jersey,	9
New York,	35
North Carolina,	10
Ohio,	22
Oregon,	3
Pennsylvania,	29
Rhode Island,	4
South Carolina,	7
Tennessee,	12
Texas,	8
Vermont,	5
Virginia,	11
West Virginia,	5
Wisconsin,	10
Alabama,	10
Arkansas,	6
California,	6
Colorado,	3
Connecticut,	6
Delaware,	3
Florida,	4
Georgia,	11
Illinois,	21
Indiana,	15
Iowa,	11
Kansas,	5
Kentucky,	12
Louisiana,	8
Maine,	7
Maryland,	8
Massachusetts,	13
Michigan,	11
Minnesota,	5
Mississippi,	8
Total,	369

Undoubtedly either party can take the above table and count upon a sure election of their candidates; but we would say to the democrats, in order to make it doubly sure they must enter into the contest with a determined will and strong heart, pulling altogether, putting victory beyond the shadow of a doubt; teaching their opponents that honesty and reform from no low condition rise—"act well your part, there all the honor lies."

A little daughter of Smith Hubbard, of Oxford, N. Y., was found in the garden, the other day, picking and eating potato bugs. This greatly alarmed her parents, who believed the potato bug to be poisonous. But she expressed her liking for them, and said that "they cracked like peanuts." The bugs did the child no harm.

Poceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders.

ELIZABETH, July 26, 1876.

Pursuant to adjournment the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union met at their room in the Court House, Elizabeth, July 20th, 1876, at 11, A. M., all the members being present, except Freeholder Russell, who was absent on account of sickness. The Director then called the meeting to order.

The minutes of the last meeting were then read and approved.

Freeholder Martine, chm'n. of committee appointed on bridge on Springfield road, near the residence of Eph. Clark, reported that the committee think it necessary to build a bridge, and that the probable cost will not exceed $400; and recommend that the committee be continued with power.—On motion the report was received and the recommendation adopted.

Freeholder Briant, chm'n. of committee on Summit bridge, reports that the committee have examined the bridge, and are of the opinion that wing walls are a necessity, and the probable cost of the necessary improvements will be from $1,000 to $1,200, and recommends that the committee be continued with power to make said improvements at a cost not exceeding $1,200.

The yeas and nays being called for, the report was received and the recommendation adopted by the following vote: Yeas, 9—Messrs. Samuel Ayers, Briant, Doty, Isemann, Martine, Randolph, Runkle, Ryder and Smith. Nays, 6—Messrs. Wm. C. Ayers, Baldwin, Devlan, Hubbard, Pierson and Winans.

Freeholder Randolph, one of the committee appointed to confer with a committee of the Somerset County Board, reports that the joint committee met on the ground of the proposed new bridge on Netherwood avenue over Green Brook in the city of Plainfield, and after agreeing to build a bridge, a building committee was appointed with instructions to prepare plans and specifications and receive proposals for the mason work. The joint committee are of the opinion that true economy will be observed in the building of the superstructure of iron at a cost of from ten to fifteen hundred dollars. The Union county committee would therefore recommend that an iron bridge be built.

On motion the report of the committee was received and the recommendation adopted.

There being no further reports from committees, new business was then taken up.

On motion (by Mr. Smith), Dr. Terrill was granted the use of his late report as County Physician, for a few days for the purpose of making supplements thereto, respecting certain causes of death.

By Freeholder Hubbard:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to properly assort, arrange and file all the bills, reports and papers in the possession of this Board.—Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee, Messrs. Hubbard, Devlan and Martine.

By Freeholder Isemann:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to examine the bridge on Springfield avenue, in the town of Cranford, to ascertain if a new bridge is necessary, and if so to report the probable cost of the same to this board. Adopted.

The Director appointed as such committee, Messrs. Isemann, Smith, Martine, Winans and Pierson.

By Freeholder Randolph:

Resolved, That the committee on Netherwood avenue bridge be continued with power to build an iron bridge, as recommended by the committee.—Adopted.

By the same:

Resolved, That when this Board adjourn it be to meet four weeks from this day, at 11, A. M., August 23d, 1876.

On motion the Board then adjourned.

JOHN M. WELDON, Clerk.

The American People.

No people in the world suffer so much with Dyspepsia as Americans. Although years of experience in medicine has failed to accomplish a certain and sure remedy for this disease and its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Heart-burn, Water-brash, Sick Headache, Costiveness palpitation of the Heart, Liver Complaint, coming up of the food, low spirits, general debility, etc., yet since the introduction of GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER we believe there is no case of Dyspepsia that cannot be immediately relieved. 30,000 dozen sold last year without one case of failure being reported. Go to your Druggist Wm. H. Voorhees and get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you. Regular size 75 cents.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

A Large Volume would not contain the mass of testimony which has accumulated in favor of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry as a safe, efficient and reliable remedy in curing coughs, colds and pulmonary disease. Many of the cures are truly wonderful. 50 cts and $1 a bottle, large bottles much the cheaper.

Brimstone and Treacle, and Milk and Sulphur are administered on every change of season in families in the old countries to fortify children against attacks of eruptive fevers. Ablutions with Glenn's Sulphur Soap supply an armor no disease can penetrate. Sold everywhere.

COMMON COUNCIL will hold a regular meeting next Monday evening.

DON'T fail to read the recommendations of "Our First Century" in another column.

THE members of Co. E, 3rd Reg't., N. G. S. N. J., are hereby notified to meet at their armory, on Tuesday next, 8th inst., at 8 o'clock.

THIS is the season in which many of our citizens may be seen in the early morning wending their way toward Amboy to enjoy their annual dip in the salt water.

THE blessed rain which commenced on Sunday and continued during Monday, was of incalculable value to the crops and growing fruit in this section. More of it would not come amiss.

THE children of St. Mary's R. C. Sunday School, visited Florida Grove, in charge of their pastor, Father J. P. Morris, on Tuesday last, and passed the day in picnicing.—An enjoyable day was experienced.

OCCASIONALLY a swallow may be seen flitting through the streets with a long piece of cord streaming out from behind him. That swallow has been batted to the earth by an urchin and a string attached to his leg. Where is Bergh or his agents?

A JOLLY party of ladies and gentlemen from New York and this city indulged in a straw ride to Rahway last Tuesday evening, engaging the services of Mr. Wm. Vail to drive them there. "Uncle Billy" is the right man to engage for such drives, and will always be found accommodating and reasonable in his charges.

WE hope our newly appointed officer of the humane society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, Mr. Wm. R. Jennings, will put a stop to the inhuman practice indulged in by boys of killing swallows as they fly through the streets. There is a State law imposing a fine of $5 on every person killing one of these birds.

ONE of the wheels of friend Ten Eyck's butcher wagon was slightly "bent" yesterday afternoon in consequence of one of Mr. Tier's Ice Wagons coming in contact with the same. Henry Hand, however, took the damaged vehicle to his shop and will soon remedy the effects of the accident, friend Tier, of course, standing the expense.

ATTENTION is directed to the advertisement of the "Citizens' Coal and Wood Yard," J. & M. Runyon, Proprietors, corner Peace and 4th Sts., which appears in another column. They deal also in flour, feed, hay, straw, &c. Parties who contemplate laying in their winter's coal will do well to give the above firm a call before purchasing elsewhere.

MR. J. M. HETFIELD, having purchased the stock and fixtures of Mr. A. L. Runyon, has opened a new Cigar Store in the new brick building owned by Levi Hetfield, Esq., on Cherry Street, where he will at all times be pleased to see his friends and furnish them with a fine brand of either foreign or domestic cigar, also tobacco, pipes, &c. We recommend a trial of his goods.

THE Young Men's Tilden and Hendricks Reform Club have received an accession to their ranks of many new members since our last issue. Permanent rooms have been secured over Rockfellow's Grocery Store, which are to be furnished with furniture by the Club and weekly meetings held. The young men of Plainfield will give a good account of themselves in favor of Tilden, Hendricks and Reform in November. Now let the Jackson Association re-organize and co-operate with them.

THE Boards of Freeholders of Somerset and Union counties, met in this city on Saturday last, and proceeded in a body to the intersection of Netherwood Avenue with Green Brook where it has been decided to build a line bridge, with the intention of receiving bids for the same, but in consequence of several bids not being handed in in consequence of a misunderstanding, it was decided to postpone giving out the contract until next Saturday. The members of the two Boards dined at the City Hotel.

THE Amateur Handicap Athletic meeting previously noticed took place Saturday the 29th inst., in the presence of about 600 spectators on the grounds of the N. Y. Athletic Club, at Mott Haven, N. Y. This meeting has been looked forward to with more than usual interest in athletic circles, handicapping being a new feature in sports. The system followed in the games of Saturday last is as follows: Each person desiring to enter sends a record of time made in a contest or training trial to the person designated "Handicapper"; the best man is put on the scratch and the others are arranged according to their respective merits, say from ½ to 1½ seconds, or more properly, anywhere from 2 to 33 feet in advance of the "scratch man." This plan has indeed the appearance of fairness, and it was presumed that the best man had little or no advantage of the poorest; on the strength of this one exceedingly large number of entries (42) were received for the 100 yd. dash, and also in the other sports. Among the entries for the 100 yd. dash we observed the names of Messrs. E. Hart, Jr., and H. M. Gilligan, members of the Plainfield Athletic Club. Owing to one error in the printed list of instructions to contestants, the former missed the boat which was to convey him to the grounds, and consequently arrived too late for his heat. The latter sustained injuries while training which forced him to withdraw. The forty-two contestants in the 100 yd. dash were divided into eleven trial heats; the winners of each heat to run a 2d trial heat, and the victors to run a final heat, the prizes to be awarded to 1st, 2d and 3d in the final heat. Promptly at 4:15 the 1st heat was started, and the others at intervals of 3 minutes, until finished: subsequently the 2d trial and final heats were run. R. I. LaMontagne, of the Rockaway Athletic Club, winning in 10½ sec., James Smith, of Galt, Ontario, 2d. La Montagne had a start of 21 feet, his time for full distance would be about 11 sec. Smith, the 2d man, had 15 feet start, and ran under protest, as it is charged that he is a professional. If the charges are sustained he will be ruled out. The one mile run followed, 13 contestants entering, with Benj. C. Williams, of the N. Y. Athletic Club, on the scratch, and the others receiving handicaps all the way from 80 to 155 yds. This exercise was the most brilliant feature of the day, and was won by David Woods, a Canadian from Galt, Ont., in 4:42, who was also running under protest. It is charged that he is a professional, and that instead of taking 115 yds. (his allowance) he should have given Williams 85. In the 440 yds. there were 28 entries, divided in 3 heats, in the first of which E. Hart, Jr. of the Plainfield Athletic Club, ran. Hart received a handicap of 39 yds., with 3 men in advance, at distances of 40, 43 and 53 yds. respectively, from the scratch. The heat was won by McEwen, of the Scottish American Athletic Club, who had 40 yds. handicap, in 53 sec.; Duffy, of the Harlem Athletic Club, 43 yds. handicap, and Hart, came in side by side, but the Harlem man got second place, thus making Hart a splendid third in about 54 sec.; time for full distance about 59 sec. The Plainfield Athletic Club feel proud of the record of their representative, who has never trained and never ran the distance but once before, when his time was 1:07. E. C. La Montagne, N. Y. A. C., won the 2d heat, and James O. Lathrop, of the Union Athletic Club, of Boston, the 3d. The final heat was won by Lathrop in 51 sec., R. R. Colgate, of N. Y., 2d. Seventeen contestants entered in the 2 mile walk, with D. M. Stern, of the N. Y. A. C., on the scratch, giving handicaps from 10 to 165 sec., won by Frederick Wessel, of Newark, N. J. Silberberg's orchestra furnished the music for the occasion. At the conclusion of the exercises, nine elegant prizes were awarded. The grand stand was comfortably filled, the ladies showing a marked interest in the sports, which were most efficiently managed by Mr. Curtis and his staff of assistants. But after all we cannot say that handicapping in this style will be successful; not one "scratch-man" had any kind of a chance to win, and in many cases the men put down as the poorest, won. As we have before noted this plan has the appearance of fairness, when in reality the "scratch-man" has insurmountable odds, even if the contestants were handicapped. Justly, every man should be started from the scratch, as in the 2 mile walk; and again, no man should be allowed to enter without a record, or if so allowed, he should be placed on the scratch. It was very evident on Saturday last that contestants had entered under false records.

New Polling District.

The Town Committee of Plainfield have made a new polling district, by dividing Dist. No. 1, in consequence of there being over 500 votes in that District, the law directing that where there is that number of votes two polling places must be provided. The boundary line in the proposed new District is Fifth Street one way and Cherry St. the other. The polling place has not as yet been announced for the new District which will be known as No. 3.

Now is the Time!

We frequently have calls for THE CONSTITUTIONALIST after the edition is entirely exhausted, by those who desire to find out what is going on about our city and suburbs. Especially so was this the case last week, when an hundred extra copies of our paper could have been disposed of had we had them on hand. Many persons depend upon our news dealers for THE CONSTITUTIONALIST each week, supposing that a copy may always be obtained there, but such is not the case. The only way to insure the weekly receipt of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST is to SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. No better or truer chronicler of passing events in our city and suburbs is published in the county, and the subscription price is low. Don't depend upon purchasing a copy each week, but subscribe for one year at Two Dollars.

Improvement.

Mr. Evan Jones has just completed four handsome French-roof dwelling houses on Putnam Street, which are a credit alike to the originator, constructor and the city. The sidewalk is paved on one side of Putnam Street from Seventh Street, past these buildings, a distance of 1,500 feet, with substantial 5 ft. blue stone flags. In fact there is a continuous flagged walk from thence to the depot. Mr. Freeman has also completed four handsome houses in the same vicinity. Mr. Samuel Huntington is erecting a large dwelling house near by, on Franklin Ave. Mr. Robert Cook has commenced the erection of a handsome residence on Le Grand Avenue, and thus improvements go on in our beautiful city. Houses are springing up everywhere, despite the hard times. Plainfield is bound to grow when other cities stand still. Enterprise does the business.

A Picturesque Suburb.

Netherwood, a new station on the Central railroad of New Jersey, distant twenty miles from New York, and one mile east from Plainfield, is situated in one of the most charming locations on that great thoroughfare. Its precincts include the rising and rolling section of country to the east of Plainfield proper, and are traversed by serpentine roads and drives, laid out in a manner to secure the most pleasing and attractive views possible. The whole is the project of Mr. Florens Schetter, a gentleman of wealth and exceeding good taste, whose ambition seems to be to improve in a manner substantial and tasteful, believing that first-class improvements will be always attractive. A model station in the Gothic style has been erected by private interests, and the construction of some twenty cottages and villas, varying in cost from $4,000 to $25,000, have been constructed.—These have all been constructed of none but selected material, and all days' work. The styles of architecture vary in accordance with the locality, the surroundings, and general views to be obtained—no two being of the same design. A portion of the tract of land undergoing development at the hands of the proprietor has been reserved for a park, in order that the views and outlook from a portion of the villas may in no way be obstructed. The natural forest trees, in all cases where consistent with beauty, have been left to afford that shade which so many new localities sadly need. Everything, in fact, seems to have been thought of in the beginning. The land being first thoroughly underdrained, provides for none but dry cellars, although in that gravelly soil it does not seem as though such precautions were actually necessary. Several of the roads and avenues have been macadamized, and as fast as the number of buildings increases it is the purpose to extend the road improvements accordingly. The park system of discarding party lines by promiscuous styles of fences has been adopted, and nothing save a low arbor-vitæ hedge or substantial stone coping marks the property lines. Mr. Schetter was a warm friend of the late Llewellyn S. Haskell, of this city.—Orange Chronicle.

Personalia.

The Washington Rock House is being extensively patronized by sick babies—the atmosphere in that elevated region being very conducive to their health.

We notice a new medical shingle in our city—that of Dr. Chas. A. Hart, in Craig Place, North Plainfield.

Mrs. Wm. Smock, of this city, has returned from her sojourn at Asbury Park.

Mr. Harry Kaufman, of the "Crescents," has departed for Newport to spend a few weeks.

Dr. Stillman, Sr., has been taking a week's vacation at Shelter Island, but is again at his post, feeling very much invigorated.

We are pained to learn of the dangerous illness through which our venerable friend, Mr. Daniel Drake, has just passed. He is in his 85th year, but extremely well preserved, and gives promise of attaining great age.

We learn that the family of Mr. Gedeon Franco have received letters from him stating that he intends to come to his home in Plainfield next September. He is at present in California.

We are pleased to learn of the improvement of Mr. S. Wadley, Esq., of North Plainfield, who, for some weeks past has been confined to his residence by sickness.

We return thanks to Hon. Miles Ross for favors conferred.

We have been presented with two mammoth beets by our Democratic friend, Esquire L. H. K. Smalley, of Scotch Plains. The vegetables are of last year's growth, preserved by him in sand, and weigh 5 pounds each.

James Leonard, an old and respected citizen of Plainfield, died at his residence on Front St., after a long and painful illness, on Saturday last. He was born at Bound Brook, N. J., Nov. 25, 1796. He was one of the first settlers of Plainfield as a town, and was engaged in the hatting business in his youth, employed by Mr. John Wilson. He married Mary Webster at the age of 28. Mr. Leonard leaves three children behind him. He was a citizen universally respected by all who knew him for his many sterling qualities.

The Park.

Several communications regarding the right of ownership to the disputed "Park" ground in our city appears in this issue. We have expressed our views regarding the matter in a previous issue but throw open our columns to those who wish to discuss the matter for or against, only asking that the communications sent us be couched in terms of civility and common sense.

Our First Century.

The following are a few of the many recommendations of our most learned men:

COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY,
Princeton, N. J., June 20th, 1876.

I have read portions of "Our First Century" and so far as I can judge from these, the events are skillfully selected and described in a very lively manner. JAMES MCCOSH, D. D., L. L. D.,
President of Princeton College.

"Our First Century" by R. M. Devens, will have, as it deserves, a wide circulation. The novelty of its conception, the skill of its execution, and the number of its admirable illustrations specially fit it for the general reader. All tastes will find something to interest and gratify among the one hundred memorable events here narrated.
E. G. ROBINSON, D. D., L. L. D.,
President of Brown University, R. I.

EASTON, April 28, 1876.

The account of the visit of Lafayette to this country, in 1824, is of special interest to us at this College. This article alone has been a sufficient inducement for me to subscribe for the work.
W. E. CATTELL, D. D., L. L. D.,
President of Lafayette College.

FIRE MATTERS.

The Board of Fire Commissioners will meet to-night (Thursday).

No. 1 steamer tried the fire well on Second Street, near Cherry, last Thursday evening. A bountiful supply of water was obtained, demonstrating the fact that this well is one of the best in the city.

The Second Annual Picnic of No. 2 engine held in College Grove, last Thursday evening, attracted to the spot a large concourse of pleasure seekers, who participated in the merry dance until twelve o'clock at night. The music, under Frazee, was as usual, excellent, and the Committee did all in their power to make the occasion one of enjoyment for their guests. Not an incident occured to mar the festivities of the occasion. The good order observed at all gatherings of the Plainfield firemen is a noticeable and worthy feature and speaks volumes for the high standing of the Department. We learn the proceeds of the picnic netted the Company a handsome sum.

The fourth annual Convention of the National Association of Fire Engineers, will be held in the city of Philadelphia, Monday, September 4, 1876, at 10 a. m.

The chief officer or representative of each Fire Department in the United States is cordially invited to attend, and the Executive Committee will be pleased to meet on that occasion such representatives of the Fire Insurance interest as may be selected by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

All officers of Fire Departments attending the Convention will report and register their names at Fire Department Headquarters, No. 1328 Race St., the place of meeting.

Inventors and manufacturers of improved apparatus for the extinguishment of fire will be afforded every facility for the exhibition of their several inventions, which they are desired to display.

The Centennial parade of the volunteer firemen of the United States will take place in Philadelphia on Thursday, September 7th. Trenton will send two or three companies. It has been suggested that those companies that do not go as organizations should send ten men each to represent them.

The members of No. 2 Engine Co. have recently furnished the parlor of their engine house in a handsome manner. We congratulate the boys on the same.

At a regular meeting of Gazelle Steam Eng. Co. No. 1, held last Wednesday evening, it was resolved that the Co. participate in the Centennial parade of the volunteer firemen at Philadelphia, September 7th, taking their apparatus with them, if permission is granted.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

Messrs. Hoxsie & Wadley have completed their well on Johnston Drive, on lands owned by John Taylor Johnston from which they procure water for the steam roller and crusher, and also to sprinkle the streets. The distance to water is about 20 feet, and there is 5 feet of water in the well. Water is pumped by steam from thence to a large tank, capable of holding 80 barrels of water, from which a supply is obtained. The tank is kindly loaned the Company by Mr. John Spencer. Another well is also being dug on the "Drive" on lands belonging to Mr. Gould. At this point it is only 11 feet to water, with not as good a supply, however, as the other. We are informed by Mr. Wadley that the work of finishing the road will be pushed forward with all dispatch. The top dressing has been laid on about 4,000 yards of the road and the work of rolling will at once commence. The public may have a chance to ride over this beautiful thoroughfare about September, if nothing occurs to interfere with the progress of the work.

Considerable excitement is manifest among the citizens regarding the imposing of payment of royalties on Driven Wells in this section. In another column will be found an explanation of the same from the pen of one who is conversant with the whole matter.

The Mountain "Rock House" is being liberally patronized as a summer resort. The rooms of the large hotel are well filled with summer boarders, and pleasure and picnic parties to this historic spot are numerous, ample accommodations for dancing being afforded. Many of our Plainfield citizens are also stopping for a few days at the "Rock House" to receive the benefit of the pure mountain air and scenery. We congratulate the Messrs. Staats Bros. upon the successful management of the hotel.

"Dottie," a young son of Mr. Jacob Voehl, aged about 10 years, fell down the cellar steps of his parent's residence on Somerset street, last Saturday evening and received slight injuries.

M. RYDER has put a large and new sprinkling wagon on his route, which saves labor and more thoroughly waters the streets. Steve is to be commended on his enterprise.

WE got that watermelon from Clifton & Vail's this afternoon. It was "just splendid" as the girls say, and the firm have plenty more of them left. Go buy one.

The property lately purchased by Mrs. Cooper on Harmony street, has been greatly improved by an addition being built to the house which is used as a Segar and Confectionery Store.

A LITTLE daughter of Patrick Kealy was run over by a milk wagon on Fourth Street, below Madison avenue, this (Thursday) morning, injuring her quite severely.

SCHOLLE, the jeweler, next to the Post Office, has just put in his establishment a handsome new safe, wherein his valuables are deposited nightly. Customers may rely upon the safe deposit of jewelry entrusted to Mr. Scholle's care for repairs, because being assured that the repairs will be performed satisfactorily.

DEMAREST, the Grocer, still continues to hold the name of "Boss" in his business for cheapness and quality of his goods. Having facilities for procuring his goods at a low figure in New York, he is enabled to sell at a corresponding low rate.—Read his advertisement, with the rooster at its head, and then give him a trial.

OUR worthy friend, Charley Zuckschwerdt, the Tobacconist, Cherry Street, came too late with a change of advertisement, and therefore we shall announce through our local columns that he has constantly on hand a fine article of either segar or tobacco. Lovers of the weed may always depend upon securing a good smoke at his establishment.

AFTER the marriage ceremony of Mr. Flynn and Miss Tobin Saturday ev'ng last the friends of the newly wedded pair were entertained in a handsome manner at the residence of the bride's brother, Wm. J. Tobin, on Sixth Street. After congratulations and refreshments the happy couple were escorted to the depot where they took the late train for New York on an extended wedding trip.

ANOTHER "big injun" has made his appearance on our streets and may be seen every day in front of Steiner's Segar Store, Cherry Street. The brave does not belong to the bloody Sioux tribe but to the peaceful and harmless Pottawatomies, and invites you, with extended hand, to step inside and try one of Steiner's best regalias, free, of course, to settle for the same.

WRIGHT'S Monkey is no more. He departed this life on Tuesday last. From a post-mortem examination made it seems that "Jocko" died from liver complaint, lung disease, ulcers in the stomach, and other complaints. A friend has dissected the venerable animal, and soon his skeleton will be seen on exhibition. Requiescat in pace, "Jocko"; age 4 years. No cards.

COUNCILMAN RYDER informs us that some malicious person is in the habit of interfering with the public street lamps, turning them out, breaking the glass, &c., especially in the neighborhood of William and Liberty Streets, and Union Avenue. Fair warning is given that the aggressor is under the eye of suspicion and should he be caught in the act as he ought to be the full benefit of the law will be awarded him.

ABOUT one year ago, Mr. John Benner, of this city, injured his right leg in consequence of a barrel of lime falling upon it, so that he was in danger of losing the limb. After treatment by several physicians, he finally tried the mode of treatment practiced by Dr. Carman, (electricity) whose office is on Second Street, above Peace, and to-day he is able to bear his weight upon the injured member, which he has not done before in months, and can walk with the aid of crutches. The relief effected by Dr. Carman in this case, with a prospect of speedy cure, is worthy of mention.

Sad and Fatal Accident.

This (Thursday) morning a young girl aged 13 years, named Mary B. Cahill, daughter of Bridget Cahill, residing on Short Second Street, this city, was instantly killed at the Grant Avenue crossing of the Central Railroad, by the Philadelphia train due at this city at 11.47. Mary, in company with two women, was walking on the railroad track, going toward Dunellen, when perceiving a coal train approaching from the west stepped over on the south track, was struck by the locomotive of the Philadelphia train as above and instantly killed, both legs being broken and the back of her head crushed in. The train was promptly stopped and the body conveyed to the freight house opposite the depot, where the remains were viewed by County Physician Gillette, who, after hearing the testimony of the two women, granted a permit for the removal of the body and exonerated the Railroad Company from all blame. This is the second fatal accident that has occurred since the elevation of the tracks, and we are of the opinion that were the tracks one hundred feet higher, people wishing to travel from one place to another, on the line of the railroad, would clamber up the railroad embankment and thus run a risk of their lives.

About the Park.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

If you think it safe to publish a few notes, and safe for one's scalp that writes them, I would like to say a few words about the park, the map, and the interests thereof, &c.

Judging from the vituperations and slanderous words coming from some of the stockholders or trustees of the College that have sold the park, one might conclude that a Modoc war was imminent in our midst, or that somebody is to be driven out of the Black Hills at the point of the bayonet or tomahawk. It would seem from the talk of some of these men that they had lost all trace of civilization, to say nothing of religion.—They act like insane men that can't keep still. They introduce the subject of the park to nearly every one they meet, in order to draw them out on the subject, and if they chance to differ from them on the subject they pronounce them thieves, robbers and liars, and very dangerous men to have around where people keep chickens and the like; and the Councilmen that voted to have this matter looked into, are put down on the same category, and charged in behalf of the city of trying to steal their property. Well, really, if this is so, there are indications of a change in the programme of procedure in our country; for this is the first charge of the public's stealing from individuals, it being usually all the other way, and it will take sometime for the public to steal back all that has been stolen from the public by individuals. And might it not be well for those blowers of the big and little horn to hold on and look to their own record? Men usually make up their minds from appearances, and are usually governed thereby, unless swerved by self interest. Let us now look at the Stillman and Rogers' map: It is a plain, distinct map of the lands purchased in behalf of these parties; but in the name of T. B. Stillman, he being the man to do the business and the man intrusted to manage the whole affair. The map is made in usual order of laying out towns and cities; with streets, with names and width; a park is marked, including one square near the centre of the plot; this square is left, marked park, without a scratch upon it, while the other squares are marked off as building lots. This map is filed in the County Clerk's office. Now, what would the man desiring to purchase a building lot, conclude on looking over this map? Would he not presume from the face of it that the streets and park were dedicated to the public? and that if he purchased on it he would be entitled to the use of these streets, and also his friends that desired to call on him? And had he bought on square marked I, boundary commencing at a stone in the centre of 8th St. and Union, running from thence bounded by the centre of 8th St. 143 ft.; thence on a line parallel to Union St. 140 ft. to a stone; thence parallel to 8th St. 143 ft. to a stone in the centre of Union St.; thence bounded by the centre of said Union St. 140 ft. to the place of beginning, containing so many feet, what would he expect to be governed by? Now, suppose he has purchased on the other corner, and runs his fence over on to his neighbor, and a quarrel ensues? How is the matter to be settled? Neither 8th St. or Union has ever been laid out by the town, nor is known by any town record. A bad dilemma, sure. "But hold on, neighbor; I have found a map filed in the County Clerk's office giving full description of our lands." Don't strike with your tomahawks, friends! Is not this conclusive that this map was filed there for a purpose, and permanency? Without it no man could locate himself at all? Talk about this map that it does not mean anything binding, and that men have a right to close up these streets and park and build houses or stables in them! Are the people or public fools, or is it you that are endeavoring to close up these streets, park, &c., and trying to nullify this map, that are thieves and fools? Are you not astonished yourselves when you look at in a common-sense light? Why, gentlemen, haven't the public as good a right to turn around and say to you "that you are robbing the public and stealing pennies from the dead man's eyes that donated it to the public?" I do not charge you with doing this intentionally, for you are men professing better things, and the world has a right to look to you for better things. Men's religion is good, just so far as it makes them exemplary men, and helps them to overcome this selfish nature of ours. The book that we claim to get our instruction from plainly teaches a different warfare among men from that you are pursuing. Let us read from it: "And if any man will sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also." I would not cast reflection upon the dead or upon the living; but here we have the map before us with all four of the parties names attached, that claimed an interest at the time it was made; two of the parties are now dead; we have heard each of the two now living say that no one had a right to close up the streets on this map. The map was a permanent thing when that matter alone was under discussion. It makes a great difference in this selfish world as to whose ox is gored. A ten dollar greenback laid across some men's eyes shuts out all reason and common sense beyond himself. Men talk about spending a whole fortune rather than give up the park; and some say that the stockholders have more money to spend than the city, &c., as if that was an argument against the city in trying to protect the public. Such men cannot have posted themselves very thoroughly upon the basis of our laws under a free government. Money is not the basis of a free government; yet it is an awful power to contend with in our country.

I see I am occupying too much space in this article, and must close. There is a chance for argument on both sides of this question, and if any one desires to respond to my article with a view to enlighten the public, without malice or abuse, I will hold myself responsible to answer any question touching the matter in my own way and from my own standpoint, and leave the public to draw their own conclusions, without malice to any, however they may differ. But, friend, don't be foolish and spend your fortunes over so small a matter, for you or your families may need it in the future. It need not cost such an everlasting sight to test the legality of this map and the right to this park. When once settled by the Courts the strife will end and peace declared, and we trust without blood being shed.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

In compliance with your request to give some information in regard to the history of the "drive well" for the benefit of those interested in their use, I will state in my imperfect way some facts which have been gathered by me:

In the year 1861, or thereabouts, Col. Nelson W. Green was commissioned to raise a regiment in the village of Courtland, in the State of New York, and it is said that in order to facilitate the mode of obtaining water for the use of the army in the Southern States, he made some experiments, not however, very successfully. He first drove a stake into the ground, withdrew it and inserted a tin pipe, and inside the tin pipe put in a lead pipe without any perforations or plug in the lower end, but drew the water directly into the bottom of the pipe by attaching a pump at the top; in that way he obtained a little water, but not enough to make it practicable for general use; about this time he had a difficulty with a subordinate officer, and shot him; was arrested and underwent a long suspense in delays and trials, but was finally acquitted. In the meantime, James Suggett, of the same place, (an old well digger) invented the perforated pipe and point, and introduced the well as a success; in March, 1864, he obtained a patent for his invention; he and his friends sold rights for two or three years and made their "pile" out of it, and then abandoned it, leaving his assignees to fight for themselves. Since the issuing of Suggett's patent there has been about 150 different devices patented for drive wells, many of them good, no doubt, but only two patents have been sustained by the Courts—Col. Green's patent and a patent for covering the perforated point with wire gauze. In the year 1867, Col. Green applied for a patent for the original or entire right to make wells by process of driving; this application was contested by Suggett; the case was at first decided in favor of Suggett, and went thro' all the stages of appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, where Col. Green's patent was allowed and granted by putting in a disclaimer to everything claimed by Suggett—in other words, gave Green the right to drive wells, but Suggett the right to the perforated pipe and point.

After Green obtained his patent, he, of course, wanted to make it available, and got out circulars and established agents and sent them over the country to sell rights and to induce well drivers to take contracts and pay him royalty and to collect royalties from users of wells, with some success, but he met with so much opposition he could not make much out of it. He commenced suits, but never prosecuted them to judgment. In March, 1870, W. & B. Douglas issued their famous circular, denouncing Green's patent as a fraud and a swindle, and offering to furnish means not only for defense, but for prosecuting any person for making a demand for "royalty or bonus" on said wells. In the year 1861 Green obtained a re-issue—of course not varying materially from the original, and made an arrangement with one Andrews, a wealthy manufacturer in Water St., N. Y., and about two years ago he commenced suit against one Carmen, a well driver on Long Island, for infringement; as a test suit before U. S. Judge Benedict, it was defended by the combined pump companies, and over three thousand pages of printed testimony taken, and altogether I understand at an expense of over $100,000. A decree was obtained sustaining Green's patent in all that was asked for in the petition. I have been informed there would be an appeal taken, but whether it will be or has been, I am not credibly informed. Soon after N. W. Green obtained his patent, he assigned the State of New Jersey to B. F. Green, of Orange; the latter is entitled to all the benefits of the re-issue, and the advantages of the decree, the same as if he was the patentee to all parts of the State unsold by him. I am frequently asked about royalties, and in answer would say that if the decree of Judge Benedict stands unreversed, Green is certainly entitled to a reasonable fee for the use of his patent. I am asked how much can he collect on each well? I answer, I don't know. I am also asked who should pay the royalties? I understand that the manufacturer, the vendor and the user are all liable, but as wells have been put down in this vicinity it would be no more than right for the user to pay, for the reason well drivers have been putting in wells so low that they cannot afford to pay, and users have had work done so low they can well afford to pay a reasonable tax. My advice is to keep cool; if the case is appealed the decree may be reversed; if not, then do the best you can, you will not be losers for having drive wells. PLAINFIELD.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

In the communication of last week signed "R," the writer admits that the map representing the Park was duly filed in the public records of the county; this act, according to the rulings of the Courts, is a dedication; this fact is plainly laid down in the Corporation Counsel's report. The word "Park" certainly was meant to convey the idea that that plot was for all purposes that a public Park would be devoted to: when we say "Central Park" we mean public "Central Park," though none of us have probably ever seen it written "Public Central Park"; there are many decisions where this theory has been established, both as to squares, lanes, alleys and streets.

It matters not whether the other owners acquiesced in this idea of T. B. Stillman as to the Park. They relinquished their interests to his good judgment when they put this property in T. B. Stillman's hands; if he was too liberal, that is the misfortune of these confiding gentlemen. But, Messrs. Editors, by reference to a map before me, I see this disputed Park, and the system of streets surrounding it plainly represented, and upon the same map the names of T. B. Stillman, Clark Rogers, Nathan Rogers and Nicholas Rogers, so they did agree or acquiesce to Thos. B. Stillman's liberality, regardless as to what they may now say. It would seem that there is considerable reason and facts to warrant the city in taking the position she has in this question. The people will co-operate with our City Fathers in their efforts. X.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Considerable excitement was manifested in Westfield last Saturday in consequence of the finding of the body of an infant in a well in that village. It seems that on Thursday last, Mrs. Elizabeth Moffett, who lives on a farm near the village, finding the well on the place dry concluded to try the water of an old and unused well on the farm, which was covered over with a growth of weeds, and which was some 40 feet deep. Dropping the bucket she found it came in contact with something and looking down she thought she saw a body.—Calling her husband, he procured a rope and basket and letting the latter down he managed to secure the object which was lying [illegible] some water which [illegible] had thrown in the well. The object proved to be the deformed body of a negro male babe, the skin being missing. It had four arms and three legs. Word was immediately sent to County Physician Gillette of this city, who proceeded to the scene, and immediately operated an inquest. It was developed in the course of examination that the child belonged to a colored servant girl named Ellen [illegible], residing in Westfield, who gave birth to the monstrosity last September, and when it was about two months old took the child away, as she said to have an operation performed on it and the superfluous limbs amputated, since which time, when asked where the child was, always replied that it was doing well. The supposition is that the unnatural mother threw the little one into the well. She, as well as supposed accessories, a colored family named Richardson, were arrested and lodged in the Union County jail, the Coroner's jury rendering a verdict, "That said unknown deformed infant came to its death by being wilfully and feloniously thrown into the well, in which its remains were discovered, by its mother, Ellen [illegible], and that Alexander and Gracie Richardson were accessories after the fact."

Engine No. 103, attached to a coal train, blew out a cylinder head near this Station Wednesday evening last, delaying passenger trains for a short time. No one was injured.

CAUTION!
The undersigned would caution the public against using or sinking driven wells under Nelson W. Green's patent, unless the same are put down by him, as all parties using the same otherwise put down, or sinking such wells will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, he having the exclusive right to sink driven wells in Plainfield. The following is a decision recently rendered by Judge Benedict, of Brooklyn, N. Y.
"Wm. D. Andrews, owner of a patent granted to Col. Nelson W. Green, for a driven well, sued Theo. A. Carman some time ago to restrain him from the use of the patent in the manufacture of a similar well. The testimony filled over one thousand pages and counsel were over two [illegible] in summing before Judge Benedict in Brooklyn. The patent is worth a million dollars. The well is an air-tight iron tube, driven into the ground until it reaches water-bearing stratum. An air pump is screwed on the top of the tube, and the other end is of steel, made sharp and perforated. Many thousands of the wells are in use. Carman is accused of using a similar well. Counsel for the defence contended that the patent was merely a new plan of more easily reaching the water bearing strata, and could not be held patentable. Judge Benedict held that the idea of forcing water from the earth into a well pit by artificial means was new, but was not patentable, but that the method by which the idea is made available was patentable. He decided that the infringement had been clearly proved.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE KIDNAPPING OF WASHINGTON AT NEWBURGH.

It was while at those headquarters a bold attempt was made to capture Washington. Clinton was very anxious to get possession of his person, and Washington received many letters warning him of his danger. But with all the places that were laid, none seemed to be so easy of execution as the one that was foiled here by the patriotism of a young lady, the daughter of one Ettrick, who professed to be a warm patriot, but those who knew him best looked on him with suspicion. This man and this spot were selected to effect Washington's capture. The plan proposed was to have a boat ready, and a party of Tories secreted in the woods near by, when Washington should be invited to dinner. His daughter overheard a conversation that exposed this plot, and informed Washington of her suspicions, and begged him not to accept the invitation of her father to dinner. The dinner hour was to be late, so that it would be dark before the meal was over. Then the seizure was to be effected, and the capture borne off to the bosom of the Hudson. The boat, manned by strong rowers, would easily have reached the English vessels below West Point before Washington would be missed. Instead of declining the invitation he accepted it, but in the meantime ordered a detachment of his life guard to march to the place just at evening, and present themselves at the door. While Ettrick was engaged in conversation with his distinguished guest, he heard their footsteps, and the low command of their leader, and, supposing them to be the detachment of Tories, he rose, and, laying his hand on Washington's shoulder, said:

"I believe, general, you are my prisoner."

"I believe not, sir; you are mine," was the reply, as the life guard closed around him.

He was immediately marched off and locked up. This threw the daughter into a paroxysm of grief. She had not anticipated any such result. She had given no positive information—simply told her suspicions to Washington, thinking the only result would be to make him decline the invitation.—That he would make her kindness to him the cause of punishment to her father she did not for a moment dream, and she besought him not to repay her fidelity to him by the imprisonment and death of her father. If it had been a mere personal matter, Washington would doubtless have suffered the man to go unmolested; but the blow was not aimed at him, but at his country, and this he would not have forgiven in an only son. Still, every instinct of his nature revolted against inflicting needless suffering on the daughter who had acted so nobly. If it had become known, however, it is doubtful if even Washington's influence could have saved the wretch whose crime was tenfold greater than that of Arnold. A drum-head court-martial and a swift death was what he richly deserved.—Washington, however, kept the whole matter quiet except to a few personal friends, and after a short confinement released him on the promise that he would leave the country. To this he gladly consented, and escaped to Nova Scotia. The secrecy which Washington maintained in regard to it for the daughter's sake doubtless kept it from becoming a part of the history of the times; but there is no doubt of its truth among the old Revolutionary families of this region.—J. T. Headley in the Galaxy.

THE WONDERFUL "BACK FALL."

AN ACCOMPLISHMENT IN STAGE BUSINESS THAT ONLY ONE MAN POSSESSES.

WALSINGHAM, in The Illustrated Weekly

But the falls that have been safely accomplished again and again, are all of minor importance compared with one great effort which most leading actors and actresses would give a great deal to be able to count among the mechanical portions of their art. This is the "back fall," an achievement of such tremendous effect on an audience, that I have more than once heard a famous "star" say that she would give $5,000 to be able to accomplish it, and yet be sure of not breaking her neck in the perilous operation.

The "back fall" is on the same principle as the fall which is ordinarily made upon the stage, that is, the weight of the actor or actress who attempts it must all go on the hands.

But the only man who could, or who can, execute the great "back fall," was an actor named Joseph Nagle, who was, and may still be, a great favorite in the West, and who has appeared in this city before such audiences as those of Wood's Museum and the Bowery. This excellent melodramatic performer was blessed with this great accomplishment, which, it may be said, sometimes threatened to "bring down the house" literally.—The effect on the audience of seeing his immense form—he was full six feet in height—falling backwards toward them was something tremendous, and he had only to introduce this feat to waken the most phlegmatic audience into enthusiasm. He would stiffen himself until perfectly rigid and then come down like an avalanche. On one occasion, when he was playing a star engagement in the Cleveland theatre where Clara Morris underwent her novitiate, some caprice overtook him, and clasping the hands of that actress firmly as she (as his daughter in the play) was preparing to withdraw from him prior to his "back fall," he bore her with him in a descent that seemed to her terrified imagination like a leap from some lofty precipice. It was usual and, indeed, necessary for him to fall alone, as he had to use his hands to receive his whole weight. He was mercifully spared from disaster in the rash attempt just noted, but at another time he was less fortunate.

So apprehensive were the actors when they used to see him try the fall at rehearsals—as he would occasionally, to accustom them to it—that they would generally rush forward or hold out their hands, involuntarily seeking to break his descent. Upon one occasion Frank Murdoch (a young actor now dead, who became well known as the author of "Davy Crockett," the romantic drama in which Frank Mayo had been so successful) seemed particularly nervous at Nagle's great fall, and that acrobatic star felt compelled to warn him against any demonstration on his part in the evening that would tend to disturb him at that point, warning him that it might prove fatal. When Murdoch saw him falling, his fears, however, mastered his discretion, and he sprang forward and touched him, breaking the fall. Nagle received severe injuries—indeed, it was a wonder that his neck was not broken—and lay in excruciating agonies for days. He recovered, however, and did the "back fall" to the admiration of all beholders many times afterwards.

MR. POSONBY'S ADVENTURE.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Posonby, while busy in his office, was surprised by the entrance of Mrs. Posonby, who came in to say that she was going to take tea with Mrs. Bilderback, and she would not be at home until nine o'clock but she would leave the key under the mat at the front door, so that he could let himself in when he went home, and he had better get his supper down town. Their son Herbert would accompany her.

Now, it so chanced that while Mrs. Posonby was thus explaining matters to her husband, her hopeful son was making desperate efforts, assisted by all the dogs he could whistle up from the entire neighborhood, to get at a rat he had seen run under the front porch.—Master Posonby punched with a long pole, and scraped and dug with a hoe, and the nine dogs deployed at irregular intervals around the porch and along the verbena bed, scratched with might and main, yelping hysterically as they scratched, and pausing from their labors now and then to fight over the question which had dug the deepest hole, to the immeasureable delight of Master Posonby. But as the sun went down and the soft light of sunshine faded into the misty gloaming, he remembered that he had been told to lock up and join his ma at her friend's. He put the key under the door-mat, and then, with his head still set on capturing that rat, he brought around an old steel-trap, wicked as dynamite, and, having baited it liberally, set it, and placed it on the porch for the benefit of the rat when it should come out. Then he carefully dismissed his allies, and stoned them in different direction, lest they should go back to resume the siege and fall into this torpedo pit.

Mr. Posonby did not come home until quite late, nor until his wife and son had returned and retired, tired of waiting for him. As the house was quite dark as he approached it, he naturally supposed his spouse had been detained later than she expected. He felt under the door-mat for the key, but as that useful little "open sesame" was in the lock on the inside of the door, he couldn't find it. He felt farther under the mat, and then, thinking he might have pushed it away, began to feel around the porch for it, sweeping his hand out in circling swoops, accompanying these erratic movements with sundry exclamations and mutterings. In one of those vigorous sweeps he thrust his hand into something that lifted him to his feet. A terrible, cold, vicious something that shut down on his hand like a wild beast, and just raised him up, until his tip-toes touched the porched floor.

The wail that broke from his lips silenced all the dogs in the Sixth Ward, and woke up a private night watchman who was pacing his vigilant beat on top an ash barrel just around the corner with his eyes shut. It wakened his son, who thrust his head out of the window and shouted "Fire!" in the most stentorian tones that a youth of eleven years can command. It roused his wife from her peaceful slumbers, who thrust her head out of another window and screamed "Thieves!" with all the full, piercing vigor of her womanly voice. It wakened his neighbors in both directions, who leaned out of their windows and shot at the suffering Mr. Posonby, who stood on the porch, dancing about in an ecstasy of agony, howling at every jump. In a moment he became calm enough to investigate; he removed the trap, explained, and was admitted to the house. He explained to Mrs. Posonby, as she bandaged his wounded hand, that he thought sure it was "snakes," and when the good lady ridiculed the idea, and said that there was no snakes about here, he shook his head wearily, and looked at her out of the corner of his eyes with a sweet, sad smile.

The State elections which are to occur prior to November are announced as follows:

Kentucky, first Monday in August.
Alabama, first Monday in August.
Vermont, first Tuesday in September.
California, first Wednesday in Sept.
Maine, second Monday in Sept.
Georgia, first Wednesday in Oct.
Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Nebraska and West Virginia, second Tuesday in October.
Texas, first Monday in November.

Jere Haralson, colored member of Congress from Alabama, made a speech at Selma a few nights ago, in which he referred to the claim of the Democrats of Mississippi that they would carry the State. "If they do," continued the sable orator, "it is certain that the United States Senate will not count the vote. I have talked with the Senators, and I know what I say." Jere should be warned by the leaders not to tell tales out of school.

Manufacturers of

Bradley's Enamel Paint.

Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

ECONOMICAL
BEAUTIFUL & DURABLE
TRADE MARK

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in a few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either inside or outside work, or boat painting than any other Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use.
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.

POETRY.

For "The Constitutionalist."

A STORY.

BY MRS. MARGARET A. BRITTIN.

Mr. Editor: I've heard a story
All about a great big gun—
Or I'd better say, a cannon,
Which I think is full of fun;
Will you print it if I write it?
Scotch Plains people oft recite it.

There's a little place called Westfield,
Full of patriots good and strong;
There the cannon lay in waiting,
July 4th was coming along;
It should belch, and roar, and thunder,
Fill the people all with wonder.

Guarded was the noble cannon
As the mighty day approached;
Valiant men stood all around it,
None within their line encroached;
Waited in anticipation,
That their gun should wake the nation.

Travelers came, benighted travelers,
Travelers who had missed their way;
Called they to the guards to right them,
Thanked them then right cheerfully,
And with looks all free from guile,
Asked the guards to take a smile.

Lack-a-day! the guards consented,
Went to take a social drink
With their jolly, lost companions,
Who no harm could surely think,
Soon excused themselves politely,
To resume their journey rightly.

Guards returned; but where the cannon?
Gone! yes, gone! but where? when? how?
Questions that they could not answer,
Can but partly answer now;
Passing strange! what hand dare pillage
Patriot thunder from their village?

Morning came; a glorious morning,
Westfield heard a mighty sound,
In Scotch Plains the cannon roaring,
Seemed to shake the very ground;
Had some warrior spirit moved it?
Circumstances almost proved it.

Whether 'twas the Westfield cannon,
Moved by warrior spirits bright,
Or some other piece of ordnance
Which had lately come to light,
It is said for fear of guile,
Westfield guards will never smile.

A MYTH.

BY CHARLES KINGSLEY.

A floating, a floating
Across the sleeping sea,
All night I heard a singing bird
Upon the topmast tree.

"O, came you from the isles of Greece,
Or from the banks of Seine,
Or off from some tree in forest free,
Which fringe the Western main?"

"I came not off the old world,—
Nor yet from off the new,—
But I am one of the birds of God
Which sing the whole night through."

"O sing, and wake the dawning,
O whistle for the wind:
The night is long, the current strong,
My boat it lags behind."

"The current sweeps the old world,
The current sweeps the new;
The wind will blow, the dawn will glow,
Ere thou hast sailed them through."

LIFE AT THE BLACK HILLS.

A THRILLING WINTER DAYS' TRAGEDY IN CUSTER PARK.

The tenth day of March was the coldest day experienced in the Black Hills during the entire Winter. The mercury was down to 20 degrees below zero and was still sinking, while the snow rolled down in blinding, eddying clouds, rendering life out of doors almost impossible. The unfortunates who were camped in and about the neighboring gulches flocked into the dark, cheerless cabins and huddled together in shivering groups about the pitch or pine fires for the free accommodation of all who might seek warmth and shelter within doors. At least thirty men had congregated at the most prominent store, the largest and best in Custer. The mud floor was rendered muddier by the thawing of the ice and snow which dripped in small streams from the rough wrappings of the cosmopolitan assemblage.

The store is a deserted military barracks, a large, low, barn-like affair, containing beds, blacksmith's forge, carpenter's bench, bar-room, grocery and notion store, and reporter's desk. The centre attraction was the bar, which was being liberally patronized by the shivering crowd.

A party of young men from Salt Lake and the mines of Nevada came rushing into the store, and, with loud, boisterous bragadocia, took possession of the bar. Ranging themselves in a row in its front, they called for "some o' that ar' licker." Round after round of whiskey was poured down, and still they stood and talked, and swore and laughed. They had just arrived from Cheyenne after a twenty days' voyage, and were about to separate and each go his own way, some to the north, others south, and one or two to remain; and this was the farewell drunk. For fully two hours they stood before the bar, pouring down whiskey, and about 1 o'clock they started for the door, where their teams stood shivering in the storm.

Alexander Shaw and Tom Mulligan were partners, both from Salt Lake, both young, rough, but affectionate friends, just on the point of shaking hands before parting.—They reached the door and rushed forth, shouting and yelling, like drunken men often do. Mulligan drew his revolver and fired in the air.

"Fire lower, Tom, or you'll hit some of us," said a companion.

"Too late! the pistol was raised again by the reeling man. There was a flash, a report, and Aleck Shaw reeled and fell across the threshold of the door.

"Good God! Tom, what have you done? Did you shoot Aleck, Tom?" said one of the party.

"No, he's only possuming, boys," answered Tom. "G—d d—n you, Aleck, come and take a drink."

The reckless shooter staggered to the prostrate form which lay upon its face, and seizing him by the coat collar, turned it over. A ghastly, sickening sight was presented to view. The pale face was striped with blood, which oozed out of a small hole in the forehead. The bullet had pierced through the brain, and had lodged beneath the skull upon the back of the head. For a moment the drunken man stared down into his friend's bloody face, then his countenance assumed a deadly pallor, his eyes became fixed with horror. He was sobered.—Turning round to his horrified companion, he said, as he threw his pistol down: "Boys, I didn't go to do it. I'll swear I didn't mean to kill him." Then bursting into tears he clasped his hands to his face and stood sobbing like a child.

"He was the best friend I had in the world, boys, and I loved him like a brother. Oh, God, what have I done! What have I done!"

"Let's hang him," suggested some excitable individual behind the half-sobered group of Salt Lake men.

"No, no! None o' that are business just yet in Custer. The man must have a trial," said a citizen, coolly, as he drew his revolver.

"I arrest you, sir, in the name of the citizens of Custer," said Pete McKay, the merchant, and Mulligan stood meekly awaiting the group of the law.

"Who'll dare to arrest him?" said one of the drunken Salt Lakers. "You let go of him, you Pete McKay. You've got no legal authority to arrest him, so jest take your claws off him or I'll——"

"This is my authority," said Pete McKay, drawing his pistol. "I am a citizen of Custer, and intend to turn this man over to the City Marshal. Who dares to interfere with me?"

"No one!" answered one or two of the bystanders, and a half dozen pistols flashed out from their scabbards, and for several minutes there was an ominous silence in the group. It was a fine tableau. There lay the victim of a drunken ruffian's recklessness, the brains slowly oozing from the hole in the forehead. Over him stood the sobered ruffian, pale and paralyzed with horror, while pistol in hand stood the merchant, grasping the shoulder of the submissive Mulligan, behind him a dozen or more miners, hunters and emigrants, silently supporting the stern, determined merchant, while opposite them were ranged the Salt Lake party, irresolute and surprised. It was a critical period in the history of Custer. A shot from either side would have resulted in a terrible slaughter. The least attempt to rescue Mulligan would have brought forth a volley from the citizens, and then Judge Lynch would have been called in to finish up the business.

Marshal Burrows soon arrived and took charge of the prisoner. A jury was impanelled and a frontier trial commenced in a little log cabin, the home, office, bed room and court room of the provisional judge.—The trial was brief; the principal witness was the reporter; nearly all the other spectators at the tragedy were too drunk to remember what transpired. The six jurymen brought in a verdict of "not guilty." Then the acquitted man was re-arrested for shooting within the city limits and fined $25 and costs, which was paid, and Mulligan started forth a free man, to brag and shoot again should the spirit prompt him so to do. This is a true sketch of Black Hills life, and fully illustrates one of the peculiar phases of frontier justice as executed by a people who govern themselves in a little republic of their own.—Kansas City Times.

COLLECTING A DEBT.

Mr. Spiggs, a fat man, of Summer St., owed Mr. Shrimp, the grocer and provision dealer, a bill, which the latter gentleman was anxious to collect, but which, for some trivial reason, the fat man had declared he would settle when he got ready and not a minute before. This saucy independence on the part of Spiggs irritated the grocer's nature to such an extent that finally he made the bold statement to his bookkeeper that if he didn't mortify Spiggs into paying that bill within thirty days he would sell out his business to him for 50 cents on a dollar.

The next afternoon Spiggs was passing the store on the opposite side of the street, when Shrimp ran to the door and yelled:

"Come in here and pay that bill of yours, and don't go sneaking down the street with your head hung down like a sheep!"

Spiggs took no notice of this demand, which seemed only to heighten the creditor's indignation.

The following day he saw Spiggs down town in company with a friend, when he approached him and said:

"You're a pretty man to be wearing a beaver hat, and here you are owing me for the victuals you and your family stuffed yourselves with last Thanksgiving!"

Returning home he encountered one of Spiggs' daughters on her way with an associate to take a music lesson, when he said:

"I should think, young lady, that you would rather go without knowing how to play and sing till your father gets so that he can pay for what you eat!"

A day or two later he saw, through the window, one of Spiggs' sons getting measured at the tailor's for a suit of clothes, when he opened the door and said:

"Don't you trust him a day for those clothes. His father has owed me $36.49 for sirloin steak and such things for over six months, and I can't get one dollar of it."

Soon after this he saw Mrs. Spiggs and her daughter chatting with some ladies in the horse car station, which he entered and said:

"This woman's husband owes me for the soap that was used in washing that collar she's got on her neck, and I want my pay for it."

About a week later he saw Spiggs riding out with a clergyman, when, after beckoning him to stop, he said:

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself! Here you are passing yourself off to this minister of the Gospel as an honest man, when you are owing me for the starch used in doing up your shirt bosom."

The next evening Shrimp called at the house of Spiggs to see if he was ready to settle his bill, but Spiggs was away. Mrs. Spiggs was at home, however, entertaining some of her lady friends at the tea-table. Shrimps pushed his way into the dining-room and said:

"Ladies, the family whose hospitality you are now enjoying owes me for the flour that those hot biscuits there, on the centre of the table, are made from, and I should like to get my money for it most confoundedly well."

Passing out of the gate he met Mr. Spigg's oldest daughter in company with a young man whom he suspected was her affianced, when he said:

"That girl's cheek wouldn't look so plump and fat if it hadn't been for me. I have been letting her have all the fresh doughnuts and bologna sausage she wanted for the past six months, and the bill hasn't been paid yet."

The young man looked as though he felt a little ashamed to be found in such company, and was commencing to move down the street, when the young lady gave a wild shriek and fell senseless to the sidewalk. He came back and assisted her into the house, and that night Spiggs came in and paid his bill in full, with a liberal interest thereto.—Danbury News.

WHITEWASH.

Tom Sawyer having offended his sole guardian, Aunt Polly, was by that sternly affectionate dame punished by being set to whitewash the fence in front of the garden. The world seemed a hollow mockery to Tom who had planned fun for that day, and who knew he would be the laughing stock of all the boys as they came past and saw him set to work like a "nigger." But a great inspiration burst in upon him and he went tranquilly to work. What the inspiration was will appear from what follows. One of the boys, Ben Rogers, comes by and pauses, eating a particularly fine apple. Tom does not see him. Ben stared a moment and then said:

"Hi-yi! You're up a stump, ain't you?"

No answer. Tom surveyed his last touch with the eye of an artist, then he gave another gentle sweep and surveyed the result as before. Ben ranged up alongside of him. Tom's mouth watered for the apple, but he stuck to his work. Ben said:

"Hello, old chap! You've got to work, hey?"

"Why, it's you, Ben. I wasn't noticing."

"Say, I'm going in a swimming, I am. Don't you wish you could? But, of course, you'd druther work, wouldn't you. 'Course you would!"

Tom contemplated the boy a bit and said:

"What do you call work?"

"Why, ain't that work?"

Tom resumed his whitewashing, and answered, carelessly:

"Well, may be it is, and may be it ain't. All I know is, it suits Tom Sawyer."

"O, come now, you don't mean to let on that you like it?"

The brush continued to move.

"Like it? Well, I don't see why I oughtn't to like it. Does a boy get a chance to whitewash a fence every day?"

That put the thing in a new light. Ben stopped nibbling his apple. Tom swept his brush daintily back and forth; stepped back to note the effect; added a touch here and there; criticised the effect again. Ben watching every move, and more and more interested, more and more absorbed. Presently he said:

"Say, Tom, let me whitewash a little."

Tom considered; was about to consent, but he altered his mind.

"No, no. I reckon it would hardly do, Ben. You see, Aunt Polly's awful particular about this fence—right here on the street, you know—but if it was the back fence I wouldn't mind, and she wouldn't. Yes, she's awful particular about this fence. It's got to be done very careful. I reckon there ain't one boy in a thousand, may be two thousand, that can do it in the way it's got to be done."

"No—is that so? Oh, come now; lemme just try, only just a little. I'd let you, if you was me, Tom."

"Ben, I'd like to, honest injun; but Aunt Polly—well, Jim wanted to do it, but she wouldn't let Sid. Now don't you see how I'm fixed? If you was to tackle this fence, and anything was to happen to it"—

"Oh, shucks; I'll be just as careful. Now lemme try. Say—I'll give you the core of my apple."

"Well, here. No, Ben; now don't! I'm afeard"—

"I'll give you all of it!"

Tom gave up the brush with reluctance in his face, but alacrity in his heart. And while Ben worked and sweated in the sun, the retired artist sat on a barrel in the shade close by, dangling his legs, munched his apple, and planned the slaughter of more innocents. There was no lack of material; boys happened along every little while; they came to jeer, but remained to whitewash. By the time Ben was fagged out, Tom had traded the next chance to Billy Fisher for a kite in good repair; and when he played out, Johnny Miller bought for a dead rat and a string to swing it with; and so on, and so on, hour after hour. And when the middle of the afternoon came, from being a poverty-stricken boy in the morning, Tom was literally rolling in wealth. He had, besides the things I have mentioned, twelve marbles, part of a jewsharp, a piece of blue bottle-glass to look through, a spool cannon, a key that wouldn't unlock anything, a fragment of chalk, a glass stopper of a decanter, a tin soldier, a couple of tad-poles, six fire-crackers, a kitten with only one eye, a brass door-knob, a dog-collar—but no dog, the handle of a knife, four pieces of orange peel, and a dilapidated old window-sash. He had a nice, good, idle time all the while—plenty of company—and the fence had 3 coats of whitewash! If he hadn't run out of whitewash, he would have bankrupted every boy in the village.

Tom said to himself that it was not such a hollow world after all. He had discovered a great law of human action without knowing it, namely, that in order to make a man or boy covet a thing it is only necessary to make the thing difficult to attain. If he had been a great and wise philospher, like the writer of this book, he would now have comprehended that work consists of whatever a body is obliged to do, and that play consists of whatever a body is not obliged to do. And this would help him to understand why constructing artificial flowers or performing on a tread mill is work, while rolling nine-pins or climbing is only amusement. There are wealthy gentlemen in England who drive four-horse passenger coaches twenty or thirty miles on a daily line in the Summer, because the privilege costs them considerable money, but if they were offered wages for the service, that would turn it into work, and then they would resign.—Mark Twain.

A RICH MAN ON RICHES.

The following story, says the Wayside, is told of Jacob Ridgeway, a wealthy citizen of Philadelphia, who died several years ago, leaving a fortune of five or six million dollars:

"Mr. Ridgeway," said a young man, with whom the millionaire was conversing, "you are to be envied more than any gentleman I know."

"Why so?" responded Mr. Ridgeway, "I am not aware of any cause for which I should be particularly envied."

"What, sir?" exclaimed the young man in astonishment; "why, are you not a millionaire? Think of the thousands your income brings you every month!"

"Well, what is that?" replied Mr. Ridgeway. "All I get out of it is my victuals and clothes, and I can't eat more than one man's allowance or wear more than one suit at the same time. Pray can't you do as much?"

"Ah, but," said the youth, think of the hundreds of fine houses and the rental they bring you."

"What better am I off for that?" replied the rich man. "I can only live in one house at a time; as for the money I receive for rents, why I can't eat or wear it; I can only use it to buy other houses to live in. They are the beneficiaries, not I."

"But you can buy costly furniture and costly pictures, and fine carriages and horses; in fact, anything you desire."

"And after I have bought them," responded Mr. Ridgeway, "what then? I can only look at the furniture and pictures—and the poorest man can do the same. I can ride no easier in a fine carriage than you can in an omnibus for five cents, with the trouble of attending to drivers, footmen and hostlers; and as to anything I desire, I tell you, young man, that the less we desire in this world the happier we will be.—All my wealth cannot buy me a single day more of life, and cannot purchase exemption from sickness and pain; it cannot procure me power to keep afar off the hour of death; and what will it avail me in a few short years, at most, I lie down in the grave and leave it forever? Young man, you have no cause to envy me."

A SCHOOLMASTER'S ROMANCE.

At a social sit-down, following an attendant upon a teachers' convention in Carroll county, N. H., an old clergyman, who had been a pedagogue in his younger days, related an anecdote, for the truth of which he could personally vouch.

It was in those times when in the country large girls and larger boys attended the district school. In fact, it was no unusual thing for boys to attend the winter term until they were eighteen. And in those days, be it remembered, flagellations were more common than they are now. The argument of the rod and [illegible] was the teacher's sine qua non.

In a certain school in New Hampshire one of the oldest, largest, plumpest and fairest girls happened to violate one of the teacher's rules. She was one of those laughter-loving, irrepressible damsels threatening to the pedagogue—always good-natured and never at home under the restraint of the school-room. The master, a prompt, energetic young man of two-and-twenty, summoned the fair delinquent into the middle of the floor, and, as was usual in such cases, the attention of the whole school was called from their lessons to the scene on the floor, it being expected that the girl would receive a severe punishment.

After a brief but severe harangue the master took from his desk a huge ferule, such as is seldom seen nowadays, and told the damsel to hold out her hand. She hesitated and hung her head. With an angry stamp of the foot the master cried out:

"Will you give me your hand?"

"Yes, sir," she promptly though somewhat shyly replied, looking up, not frightened, but with a twinkling smile playing around the dimples of her face; "and my heart with it!" at the same time holding out her plump hand.

A dead silence reigned for a few moments in the school-room. The master's face flushed, and a moist light was in his eye. Finally the ferule was laid back unused upon the desk, and the now blushing damsel was told that she might take her seat, but to remain after school was dismissed.

That schoolmaster lived in another town, and when he went away that girl went with him as his wife, and after the lapse of many years he had never had occasion to regret his acceptance of the hand so quaintly given him.

THE LATEST WONDER.

The readers of the Traveller have been made acquainted with the wonderful inventions of Prof. Bell, by which musical and vocal sounds can be and have been sent over the electric wires, but few if any are aware of the wonderful results which are sure to follow these improvements in telegraphy. A few nights ago Prof. Bell was in communication with a telegraphic operator in New York, and commenced experimenting with one of his inventions pertaining to the transmission of musical sounds. He made use of his phonetic organ and played the tune of "America," and asked the operator in New York what he heard.

"I hear the tune of 'America,'" replied New York: "Give us another."

Prof. Bell then played "Auld Lang Syne."

"What do you hear now?"

"I hear the tune of Auld Lang Syne, with the full chords, distinctly," replied New York.

Thus, the astounding discovery has been made that a man can play upon musical instruments in New York, New Orleans, or London, or Paris, and be heard distinctly in Boston! If this can be done, why cannot distinguished performers execute the most artistic and beautiful music in Paris, and audiences assembled in Music Hall, Boston, to listen?

Prof. Bell's other improvement, namely, the transmission of the human voice, has become so far perfected that persons have conversed over 1,000 miles of wire with perfect ease, although as yet the vocal sounds are not loud enough to be heard by more than one or two persons. But if the human voice can now be sent over the wire, and so distinctly that when two or three known parties are telegraphing, the voices of each can be recognized, we may soon have distinguished men delivering speeches in Washington, New York, or London, and audiences assembled in Music Hall or Faneuil Hall to listen.—Boston Traveller.

A BEREAVED MOTHER'S PETITION.

Monday evening, as the train bound East in charge of Conductor Dunham stopped here for supper, we noticed a young woman attired in deep mourning alight from one of the passenger coaches and walk down the platform, attended by a gentleman. She held a handkerchief to her eyes, and with her head resting upon the shoulder of her escort, her body quivered with emotion, as the hot tears ran down her face. We did not suspect the cause of her grief until she passed the baggagemaster leaning against his car. As she did so, she lifted up her head, and with the tears still streaming down her pale face, she said, in a tremulous voice: "Please do not pile anything on my little ones!" and then, giving up afresh to the intensest grief, she sank her head on the shoulder of the gentleman, and passed back to the coach from which she came.

As soon as she was gone from sight, we stepped up to the baggageman and inquired the cause of the lady's action. He thereupon told us that only three weeks ago she passed up the road with a family of three little children. She and they were, at the time, enjoying good health, and were happy in one another's love. They were beautiful children and the mother idolized them. Having reached their point of destination in the western portion of Kansas they were suddenly taken sick, and the three little ones died within a few days of one another, and there was nothing left to the mother but to bring their corpses back to her home in the East, and so they were in the car.—Sedalia Bazoo.

WHY SHE PLANTED ROSES.

A blacksmith had in his possession, but under mortgage, a house and piece of land. Like many others, he was at one time found of the social glass, was happily induced by a friend to join the temperance society. About three months after he observed his wife one morning busily engaged in planting rose bushes and fruit trees.—"Mary," said he, "I have owned this lot five years, and yet I have never known you to care to improve it in this manner." "Indeed," replied his smiling wife, "I had no heart to do it until you gave up drink. I had often thought of it before, but I was persuaded that should I do it, some stranger would pluck the roses and eat the fruit.—Now, with God's blessing, this lot will be ours, and we and our children may expect to enjoy the produce. We shall pluck the roses and eat the fruit." And they did.—Their cottage was known to be the prettiest in the neighborhood.—National Grange.

The Kings county Surrogate has a knotty question to decide. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers perished at sea in a shipwreck, without leaving any children. Mrs. Rogers had $5,000 in the Savings Bank, which is claimed by her sister and also by his brother. The latter's claim is on the ground that she died first, as assumed by a presumption of law, that the husband being the stronger would survive the longer in the water. The question before the Surrogate is which perished first, the husband or the wife? If both went down at the same time, to whom does the $5,000 go—to the wife's heirs or to the husbands. The decision was postponed.

It is supposed that the reason graduates of female colleges are called bachelors of art instead maids of art, is that the former is a higher degree. At least the maids are always after the bachelors.

SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
OF NEW YORK.

For Vice President,
THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
OF INDIANA.

GOV. TILDEN'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

Gov. Tilden's letter of acceptance seems to meet with general favor. The independent press, without exception, give it a warm approval. Its decided tone and the evident determination of its author, apparent throughout the whole of the document, to carry out a complete reform in the Administration of the Government, has recommended it to the whole people, who are enthusiastic in its praise. The Republican press have engaged in the hopeless task of endeavoring to pull it to pieces but with so little success that already they have given it up as an effort useless and unprofitable. The more the attention of the people is directed to it, and the more it is studied by them the worse it will be for the chances of the ticket of Hayes and Wheeler.—Great stress is laid by some of the Republican papers, on the fact that it does not condemn the conduct of the whites in the trouble at Hamburg, S. C. The facts in that matter have not yet become known, and it would have been an unwise act on Gov. Tilden's part, as it has been on the part of his opponents, to discuss that subject until the bottom facts are reached. It should however be sufficient to satisfy the people, that Gov. Tilden has expressed his intention, if elected, to see that every citizen, without distinction of color, shall receive, so far as it is in his power to enforce it, equal and exact justice in all his political relations.

His examination of the financial condition of the country is exhaustive.—He points with an unerring finger to the great source and origin of the trouble and shows, incontestibly, the causes of its continuance, and the only mode by which it can be arrested and the country restored to prosperity.

No document of a similar character, has ever, in the history of our country, excited greater interest, and none we know, has produced and, in all probability, none will ever produce a greater revolution in the politics of our land, than will this able and remarkable letter.

In order that our readers may peruse and compare this letter with that of Gov. Hayes we publish both in our issue of to-day.

Did our space permit we should be glad to publish the letter of Gov. Hendricks. But it is probably unnecessary in view of the fact that he is in perfect accord with the head of the ticket.—His popularity in the West, especially in his own State, attested by the fact that he is now its Governor, assures us that he will give a good account of himself there in November.

HARD MONEY.

The advocates of hard money in this country, or properly speaking, a gold based legal-tender currency, have been, from the earliest period of national existence, the Democratic Party.

During the Presidency of Jackson the currency war was bitterly waged, the Democrats in Congress opposing an inflated issue of paper promises so earnestly, that one of their prominent leaders, Senator Benton, of Missouri, was given by the Whigs the derisive title, as they supposed, of "Old Bullion."

Time proved it to be an honorable designation.

Under the Administration of Van Buren the Independent Treasury was established as a distinctive Democratic measure, its purpose being to collect and disburse in coin all the financial transactions of Government.

Every imaginable species of hostility to that measure was put forth by the Whig Party. It was denounced by them in one breath as rascally and in another as foolish.

The Democrats carried it through in spite of opposition.

What was the result?

The working of the Independent Coin Treasury exerted such an excellent influence over financial and business interests, and evidenced in its institution and management so much wisdom, that its popularity became almost universal.

The Democrats have ever handled the currency and finances to the advantage of the people and to the upholding of national credit, and, as a party, they are capable of performing like good service in the future.

That old conservative sentinel of truth and honesty, the New York Journal of Commerce, thus speaks:

"We are not advocates of party, but we would like to see a change in the Administration of public affairs, the present rulers having thoroughly disgraced themselves and the country; and we are not afraid to trust the Democrats upon the question of a sound currency. They have been on the right side of this dispute ever since this country gained its independence. All the United States banks and other 'soft money' projects known to our history, have found their origin and their advocates in the partisans upon the other side.—And every distinct offer to defraud the public creditors, every attempt at repudiating the solemn obligations of the Government, has come from acknowledged leaders of the party now in power. We think that those who established the Sub-Treasury, and gave to this country the admirable system of finance that preceded the war, may be safely trusted to uphold its honor and redeem its plighted faith in the years to come."

A BOMBSHELL.

Ethan Allen, of New York, in his futile efforts at whipping-in the Liberal Republicans to the perpetuation of Grantism under the banner of Hayes and Wheeler, meets with some sore knocks.

Colonel Kent, a prominent New Hampshire Liberal, agonizes Mr. Allen with the assurance that all the old Greeley men up that way are for Tilden, and Mr. Scovel, of New Jersey, makes the splinters fly in the following letter, which is worthy of attentive perusal:

CAMDEN, N. J., Aug. 1. 1876.

Ethan Allen, Chairman Liberal National Committee.

DEAR SIR:—You ask me in your letter of the 21st ult. to "lift up your (my) voice and rejoice like a strong man for Hayes and Wheeler."

I cannot do it, and I will tell you why.

In 1872 we fought that good fight together, in which I was proud of your companionship. We then supported Horace Greeley for President—a pure man, a good man, a statesman and a patriot. The Democracy at Baltimore, forgetting their animosities, joined us in endeavoring to restore and rebuild upon the foundation of the amendments to the Constitution, which then promised and yet promise a re-growth of constitutional liberty, through which, pure laws shall be the measure of perfect freedom. Gov. Austin Blair (a man respected and revered by Mr. Greeley) says of Mr. Tilden, the head of the ticket: "He makes no compromises with corruption and never seeks to avoid the enmity of the rings. As a practical reformer he has led the way to the restoration of honest and economical government in the only way possible by a vigorous assault upon the powerful combinations of political peculators who have possessed themselves of the reins of government."

But you say "Mr. Tilden is honest from calculation not from nature."

To use a homely proverb, why do you "look a gift horse in the mouth?" What right have we to go into the motives of a statesman who has imprisoned or driven into exile gigantic municipal robbers and then trampled in the dust the powerful and defiant Canal Ring of the State of New York?

While we have been talking for reform Governor Tilden has been acting reform.

The people cried aloud for a change of measures and men. Massachusetts, with added thousands in every State, hungering and thirsting for honest Government, asked for Bristow for President. We were told that he would apostatize, and Johnsonize the Republican party and Morton and Conkling and Logan, cunning in their extremity, dodging the real issue, have given us Rutherford B. Hayes, unknown to the nation save that he has been three times Governor of Ohio. We have nothing to say against him. But does he fill the bill? The stream cannot rise higher than the fountain. The fountain is corrupt. The slow poison of this Administration—alas! not slow enough—has penetrated the great cohorts of office-holding Republicanism from the Cabinet to the Custom House. Will Mr. Hayes be stronger than the convention which cried Io triumphe to Grant's Administration when the people had repudiated it with a unanimity unparalleled in history!

It seems to me "no." The campaign of 1872 was based on generous sentiment and sound policy. In supporting Hayes you go back; I go forward!—We are at last a homogenous people. There is no North, no South; but the machinery of Republican politics wave over us at once a truncheon and a "bloody shirt," as if the war had not ended eleven years ago; and seeks to kindle old animosities while inaugurating a policy of passion. To this policy, which Hayes must be powerless to resist, I have never given, and I never can give, my assent.

The people care little for the money question. That has no business in this business Tilden & Hendricks (the latter a well beloved statesman of Indiana, fully abreast of the advanced sentiment of the country), stands to-day where you and I stood at the Cincinnati Convention of 1872. We believed them sincere then, when, conquering their prejudices, they joined hands with us in fighting a a corrupt Administration.

And I believe them sincere now, when they promise the people an honest Administration.

Such a platform would satisfy Lincoln or Chase or Greeley or Sumner.—But Republicanism now means Conkling and Morton and Sargent and Logan as the power behind the throne; it means the continued domination of an arrogant and unscrupulous aristocracy of office-holders; it means power without conscience, and it mistakes audacity for statesmanship. Politics is not a profession, it is a duty; and because I believe it my duty I shall advocate the election of "Tilden and Hendricks." Sincerely yours,

JAMES M. SCOVEL.

DEMOCRATIC HONESTY.

Thaddeus Stevens, when a Republican leader in Congress, openly advocated the payment of the national bonded debt in a depreciated paper currency, and now, Thurlow Weed, a Republican leader out of Congress, favors it redemption in debased silver.

Both schemes are repudiation.

The national debt is excessive, and no doubt greatly swollen by dishonest means, but it is a public obligation, and must be paid to the last penny, not in rags or shams, but in coin of full weight and fineness, the only legal-tender of the Constitution.

That is honesty from a Democratic standpoint.

EMBLEMATIC.

The Western Democrats are raising hickory poles surmounted with brooms.

We like that idea much.

It is a speaking Democratic symbol.

The hickory portrays the stern rectitude and fearlessness of an Andrew Jackson.

The broom is typical of the practical reform of Samuel J. Tilden, which alone can sweep away the present terrible accumulation of official corruption.

Up with the hickory and the broom.

Work and vote for TILDEN AND HENDRICKS.

It has been well said, that the election of Mr. Hayes to the Presidency would be only covering an old pie with a new crust. That won't satisfy the popular appetite. The Grant pie is very unsavory—decidedly offensive.—The people demand sound ingredients and clean-handed cooks. No more such pie, if you please. The country is sick.—Vote for TILDEN AND HENDRICKS.

The Republican candidate for Governor of Indiana, Mr. Orth, withdraws from the contest, because, as he says, the party will not give him hearty support. He was one of President Grant's Ministers abroad, and brought home as a supposed strong man to defeat the Democratic nominee. Put Indiana down for Tilden and Hendricks.

SOUTHERN ELECTIONS.

The election in Alabama, on Monday last, for Governor and other officers, resulted in a grand victory for the Democracy. For the first time in years the Democrats made nearly a clean sweep, electing their Governor (Houston) by about 40,000 majority, and seven out of eight Congressmen. The Democratic majority on joint ballot in the Legislature will be very large. The showing between the result this year and that of 1872, when Grant carried the state by about 8,000 majority, is exceedingly significant. There is no pretense that there was any interference at the polls and the result must be a source of satisfaction to all who are looking for a return to good government.

The press of New Jersey were entertained at the State Fair Grounds, Waverly, N. J., on Saturday last by the officers of the State Agricultural Society, Hon. Amos Clark, President. The object of the meeting was stated by the President to be to bring together members of the editorial fraternity, and lay before them the future objects of the Association regarding the State Fair to be held on the grounds next September. We shall speak further on the subject in a future issue. We are indebted to Treasurer Sam'l Manning and the other officers of the Association for courtesies extended.

Our contemporary of the Times says not a word in its last issue about the election in Alabama and Kentucky, which went so overwhelmingly Democratic. Well, we presume our neighbors forgot the circumstance, but we do wish they would keep their readers posted on the passing events of the days

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, the municipal expenses or stealings of the City of Washington cost the taxpayers of the United States about three million dollars. Is it not time to inaugurate Reform?

All the Grant office holders are enthusiastic for Hayes and Wheeler.—They fear dreadfully the reforming hand of President Tilden. Well may they.

The popular sentiment is—"Give us a change of Administration. Things cannot possibly be worse, and a change may better them."

GOV. TILDEN'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

ALBANY, July 31, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: When I had the honor to receive a personal delivery of your letter on behalf of the Democratic National Convention, held on the 28th of June, at St. Louis, advising me of my nomination as the candidate of the constituency represented by that body for the office of President of the United States, I answered that, at my earliest convenience, and in conformity with usage, I would prepare and transmit to you a formal acceptance. I now avail myself of the first interval in unavoidable occupations to fulfil that engagement.

The Convention, before making its nominations, adopted a Declaration of Principles, which, as a whole, seems to me a wise exposition of the necessities of our country, and of the reforms needed to bring back the Government to its true functions, to restore purity of administration, and to renew the prosperity of the people. But some of these reforms are so urgent that they claim more than a passing approval.

The American People:

No people in the world suffer as much with Dyspepsia as Americans. Although years of experience in medicine has failed to accomplish a certain and sure remedy for this disease and its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Heart-burn, Waterbrash, Sick Headache, Costiveness palpitation of the Heart, Liver Complaint, coming up of the food, low spirits, general debility, etc., yet since the introduction of GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER we believe there is no case of Dyspepsia that cannot be immediately relieved. 30,000 dozen sold last year without one case of failure being reported. Go to your Druggist Wm. H. Voorhees and get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you. Regular size 75 cents.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

A Large Volume would not contain the mass of testimony which has accumulated in favor of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry as a safe, efficient and reliable remedy in curing coughs, colds and pulmonary disease. Many of the cures are truly wonderful. 50 cts. and $1 a bottle, large bottles much the cheaper.

A Box of Green's Sulphur Soap, which contains three cakes and costs only sixty cents, is sufficient to supply material for at least twenty Sulphur Baths, which would eradicate a whole catalogue of rheumatic and cutaneous maladies. Sold everywhere.

MARRIAGES.

AN ORDINANCE

To open and lay out Netherwood Avenue from Front Street to Green Brook, in the City of Plainfield.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

Section 1. That a public street in the City of Plainfield, known and designated as Netherwood Avenue, the centre line of which begins at a point in the Northwesterly side of Front street, distant along said side of Front Street 71 feet to a southwesterly direction from the division line between lands of John Taylor Johnston and George Lenington, thence in a magnetic course of tangent N. 49 deg. 45 min. W. for a distance of 62.53 feet to a point of curve, thence curving to the left with a radius of 955.37 feet for a distance of 300 feet to a reversing point, thence curving to the right with a radius of 1035 feet for a distance of 550 feet to another [illegible] thence curving to the left with a radius of 914.57 feet to a point in the centre of Green Brook, which is the City line, and there to end: Said Netherwood Avenue to be 66 feet wide, be and the same is hereby laid out and opened, and that the lands and real estate with the necessary appurtenances therefor be taken and appropriated for the Avenue aforesaid, pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the City of Plainfield," and of the supplements and amendments thereto.

Providing that all expenses in opening and laying out said Avenue be paid by the property-owners living along the line of said Avenue.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that an Ordinance, whereof the above is a true copy, is now pending before the Common Council of the City of Plainfield; that said Ordinance has been read twice, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and that it is the intention of the said Common Council to enact the said Ordinance. Notice is hereby further given that on Monday, September 4, 1876, at 8 o'clock, p. m., the said Common Council will meet in the council chamber in said city, and then and there proceed to consider the said Ordinance; and all persons interested in the said Ordinance, or owners of property affected thereby, are notified then and there to appear before the said Common Council and show cause or reason why the said Ordinance should not be enacted and passed.

NELSON RUNYON, City Clerk.

Plainfield, N. J., August 8, 1876. 2w

Corporation Notice.

Resolved, That James Parker, George Boyd and Joseph S. Cutter, three judicious and disinterested citizens of the City of Plainfield, be and the same are hereby appointed commissioners to make an estimate and assessment of the damages that any person owning property situated on Cherry Street, between the southeasterly line of North Avenue and the northwesterly line of Seventh Street in said city will sustain by reason of the widening of the said Cherry Street, between said southeasterly line of North Avenue and the northwesterly line of Seventh Street, pursuant to the provisions of an ordinance entitled "An Ordinance for the widening of Cherry Street from North Avenue to Seventh Street," approved May [illegible], 1876; and the said commissioners shall also ascertain all other necessary expenses incident to the widening of said street and shall assess the whole amount of the said damages and expenses justly and equitably among the owners and occupants of all the lands, tenements and real estate benefitted by the widening of the said street in proportion, as near as may be, to the advantage each shall be by said commissioners deemed to acquire, and shall make a report in writing to this Council thereof, and generally discharge and perform all the duties required to be performed by section 41 of the act of the Legislature of New Jersey entitled, "An Act to amend the Charter of the City of Plainfield," approved April 5, 1872.

Resolved, That Thursday, the thirty-first day of August, 1876, at 8 o'clock, p. m., and the Common Council chamber in said city of Plainfield, shall be the time and place for the said James Parker, Geo. Boyd and Joseph S. Cutter commissioners appointed by the foregoing resolution, to meet to fulfill the duties of their office, and all persons interested are hereby notified to be then and there present.

I do certify the foregoing to be true copies of the Resolutions passed by the Common Council on the 7th day of August, 1876.

READ the Proceedings of Common Council. There were three candidates for the office of Councilman to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Hunter, but no one elected for want of the requisite majority of votes.

THERE will be a grand shooting match at Campbell's Club House on Park Avenue, to-morrow (Friday), commencing at 10 o'clock, A. M., at which 300 tame birds will be provided. Several crack shots from this city will participate.

THE Stars and Stripes were flying from the flagstaff in front of the office of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST on Tuesday last in honor of the grand victory in Alabama on Monday, also the increased Democratic gains in old "Kaintuck" the same day.

QUERY—Was Tuesday last the Queen's birth day? We make the inquiry because we observed one of our lovers (?) of the "ould country" wending his way homeward from a visit to some friends on that day with the national flag of England stuck conspicuously in his hat.

DEGRAW BROS., the celebrated Soda Water Manufacturers, of this city, are now manufacturing a superior article of ginger beer, which is put up in pint stone bottles and retailed to customers. It is a most palatable drink during these hot days. Visit their factory, on Second Street, and try it.

THE Boards of Freeholders of Union and Somerset Counties met in this city on Saturday last to receive bids for the masonry and grading of the bridge over Green Brook at Netherwood Ave. Mr. John Wilson, of Plainfield, being the lowest bidder, the contract was awarded to him. Price $412.00.

THE Board of Trade will hereafter hold their regular meetings in their commodious room in Berry's Building, corner of Front and Cherry Streets. The organization is in a flourishing condition, our merchants taking an active interest in the same. They have been beat long enough by a certain class and propose to now stop it.

JOHN OFFLEY, barber, formerly located over Berry & Thorn's Store, Front Street, is now located on Cherry Street, next to Dobbin's Segar Store, where he will at all times be pleased to see customers, and will personally superintend the business of his establishment. John is a good shaver as all know who have tried him.

A RUMOR has been in circulation in this and other cities the past two weeks that John Taylor Johnston, Esq. had resigned the Presidency of the Central Railroad and Col. Kean appointed as his successor. This rumor has not a word of truth in it. Col. Kean is acting as President during Mr. Johnston's trip and vacation abroad.

WE notice that the enterprising managers of the Central R. R. have placed a drinking fountain midway between the passenger rooms of the depot at this city, which was long needed and will be appreciated by the traveling public. And now, gentlemen, if you please place a regulator or correct time piece in the office of the ticket agent and thus further conduce to the public benefit.

MANY of our citizens are visiting Woodbridge, N. J., for the purpose of enjoying the excellent salt water bathing there. The beach is sandy and handy bathing houses have been erected along the shore for the accommodation of patrons. As many as three hundred persons have been seen bathing at once on this beach during the past week.

ON Tuesday last the colored population gave themselves up to the enjoyments of a Grand Picnic in Vail's Grove, in honor of the Emancipation Proclamation. Speeches were made on Equal Rights, for Hayes and Wheeler, &c., and a general good time experienced in dancing and other amusements. Pete Randolph furnished the music, which was good.

MR. PETER TEN BROECK has for sale excellent steel plate engravings of the candidates for President and Vice President, both Democratic and Republican, executed by the celebrated artist, Geo. Perrine. The exceedingly low price for each, 25 cents, places them within the reach of all. Purchase a copy of your favorite, ON. W. Tilden and Hendricks.

THE Elizabethans complain of the onslaught of mosquitoes on peaceable citizens of that city, it being asserted that no netting is made strong enough to keep the pests out of dwellings. There is one way for the afflicted citizens of our benighted sister city to get rid of the "skeeters" and that is to move to the beautiful city of Plainfield, where such nuisances as mosquitoes are not known and mosquito netting not necessary.

ON Sunday last as the funeral cortege conveying the remains of the late Benj. Pyzie to their last resting place, was passing the Park House, a horse attached to the carriage containing the chief mourners, suddenly became vicious and commenced to kick, breaking the shafts of the vehicle and causing, for a time, consternation among the occupants, who finally were provided with seats in other carriages.

MICHAEL UNDAL, an enterprising man, has started a Livery Stable near Netherwood Station, and is prepared at all hours of the day or night to furnish horses and carriages at reasonable rates. He has established a branch office at Zockschwert's Segar Store, on Cherry Street, where all orders left will receive prompt attention, no extra charge being made for bringing a team from Netherwood to customers in Plainfield.

MR. WILLIAM E. JOHNSON, has purchased the Tonsorial Establishment of John R. Offley, on Front Street, over Berry & Thorn's Hardware Store, and will hereafter conduct the business in a manner that is guaranteed to suit all his customers. The rooms have been thoroughly overhauled and neatness being one of the new proprietors proclivities, aside from the fact that he is a first-class workman should attract new customers to this place of business. New and first-class workmen have been engaged and we predict a liberal share of patronage for Mr. J.

THE Annual Picnic of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society, at Vail's Grove, last Thursday, was well attended and the occasion one of enjoyment. The music, under Quass, was good and gave general satisfaction. The number in attendance was very large and the receipts netted a handsome sum. The stage and dancing floor were handsomely trimmed with American and Irish flags, and the Committee of Arrangements, Messrs. Dougherty, Flynn and Moran, did all in their power to make the occasion a success.

THREE men with empty bags slung over their shoulders were seen wandering down toward New Brooklyn last Sunday evening, and the next day one of the property owners in the vicinity of the city line, found that he had been despoiled of about $25 worth of early vegetables and fruits.—$10 will be paid to any one giving information sufficient to convict these rascals, who are not content with simple robbery, but aggravate the act by ruining what they can not carry with them. Information may be left at this office.

QUITE a furore was created among our citizens last Saturday morning by the sight of Prof. King's mammoth balloon "Buffalo," which started from the Centennial Grounds on Friday for a trip as far as the aeronauts could go. The air ship passed near Plainfield about seven o'clock Saturday morning. When first seen it was passing over the mountain, directly over "Peppy Orchard," and afterward another current of air seemed to strike it and waft the voyagers over Westfield in the direction of Rahway. Persons using strong glasses could plainly discern persons in the car. It was finally lost sight of in the clouds and about ten o'clock came down between Rahway and Woodbridge, the aeronauts packing up the balloon and proceeding to Philadelphia via rail for Perth Amboy. When passing over the mountain, a colored person in the employ of Mr. Wallace Vail at the "Springs" saw the monster, and thought his time had come sure. Charley turned nearly white from the effects of his astonishment.

THE German Sunday School, of this city, held a Picnic on Tuesday last in Mr. Wallace Vail's Grove, on Putnam Avenue, kindly loaned by him for the occasion. The scholars assembled in the Church on 5th Street, at 9 o'clock, and were conveyed in vans to the Grove. The teachers and friends connected with the School spared no pains to make it a time of very great rejoicing and one long to be remembered. Provisions were abundant and games were provided for the juveniles with which they could pass the time very merrily. The efforts of the friends were crowned with success, for at the close of the day's festivities the unanimous verdict was—it was the best Picnic ever held in connection with that Sunday School.—This Church and Sunday School have taken a new start in connection with their new Pastor, Rev. Mr. Schneider, who with his excellent wife are winning the esteem of the German population; already signs of success are appearing. Mrs. S. is in every respect a Pastor's wife and exerts herself very faithfully to assist her husband in his labors amongst the people. Special thanks are given to all the friends who so nobly assisted to make the Picnic successful. They found by experience the way to be happy is to try to make others happy.

A Card to the Public.

It is reported by John Offley, Barber, or by his friends that he was turned out of the room that he occupied as a Barber Shop, over Berry & Thorn's Store, unjustly, which I wish to deny. Mr. Offley has occupied the room for 3 years and could have remained had he not offered to sell it to the present occupant. When I heard of it I went to Mr. Offley and asked him about it; he said he had offered to sell the whole fixtures to Mr. Johnson for $310. I told him I would give him $300 and he agreed to take it, my object being two-fold, one was to save $100 rent and the other to have a Barber Shop kept clean and neat, which will be done by Mr. Johnson the present occupant.

We return thanks to James Q. Miles, Esq., for a basket of delicious apples.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

Charles E. Dunham has purchased ground next to his new dwelling on Craig Place and will immediately commence the erection of a new dwelling house.

Dr. Hart whose card appears in another column is a new and rising physician, and will no doubt receive the liberal support he merits from our citizens. His office is on Craig Place.

On Thursday last a match game of base ball was played between the employees of Berry & Thorn and Pete Weaver's Centennial nine, resulting in favor of former club by a score of 22 to 35.

Mrs. Austin's School for Young Ladies and Children will open on Monday Sept 4th. The high reputation Mrs. A. enjoys as a competent teacher warrants us in saying that parents cannot do better than entrust their children to her charge.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

The inhabitants of this town are up and doing, in the protection of their interest regarding the Royalty for Driven Wells. A meeting of the prominent villagers was held on Monday evening and effected a strong organization to confer and co-operate with committees from sister townships. The Committee is composed of Henry Hosford, W. T. Peck, Ernest Webb, S. M. Foster.

On Monday last, Francis Marsh, a young man of highly respectable parentage, in this city, engaged a horse and buggy at the Livery Stable of Michael Undall, Netherwood, stating that he wanted to take a short ride. Not re-appearing with the turnout, on Wednesday Mr. Undal informed Capt. Breen of the circumstance and that officer proceeded to take steps toward the recovery of the same. The New York papers of Thursday morning contained an account of the attempt at suicide in Washington Park, that city, of a young man who said he was from Plainfield, and future developments proved that the person mentioned was the youth from Plainfield, who it seems to gain sympathy and cover up his doings, shot himself through the fleshy part of the left arm and when taken to a station house by the police sent for a brother in Brooklyn, N. Y., and pretended that he knew nothing about the circumstances of hiring the rig, in fact said that he was crazy. His brother brought him to Plainfield on the last train Wednesday night and on Thursday morning he was placed under arrest and lodged in the Station House. The same afternoon, at three o'clock, he had a hearing before Justice Clark, when counsel moved for an adjournment until 10 o'clock, Friday, 11th inst, which was granted, Marsh being re-committed until the return of his father, in the evening, who signed his bail bond for $700.00.—Whereupon his memory suddenly returned and he informed Chief Breen that he had left the property at a certain place in Newark, whereupon the chief started in search of the same, and succeeded in recovering it. The wound on the young man is only trifling.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Mr. Freeholder Martine has caused the culvert under the old R. R. (now Midway Ave.) near the corner of Park Avenue, in that place, which had partly fallen in, to be taken up, and a good substantial bridge to be built in its place. Mr. W. D. Johnson, mason, did the work.

We are glad to learn that the young men are about to form themselves into a society to be called "The Young Men's Democratic Reform Club." This is a movement in the right direction and will commend itself to all who desire an honest and faithful administration of the laws.

A substantial bridge, covered with blue flagging, is being constructed on Park Avenue, near Lafayette, in place of the dilapidated old wooden affair at that place. Mr. Peter Frazier is the contractor for the job.

We are sorry to learn of the severe illness of our old friend, Mr. R. Brittin, Proprietor of Brittin's Hotel, Scotch Plains. We hope he will soon regain his wanted health so as to cast his vote for Tilden & Hendricks.

For The Constitutionalist.

Reply to "Map."

MESSRS. EDITORS:

With your permission I am inclined to write a few words in reply to the article "About the Park" and signed "Map," which appeared in your last issue. We do not know the motive that prompted the article in question but after careful reading we are led to believe that its author was more anxious to heap up personal abuse and provoke bitter discussion, than any wish to give any lucid statement of facts or well founded opinion.

The discussion about the "City Park" seems to have reached its climax in this letter; with "Map" it is no longer a question of honest inquiry as to the rights of possession and the validity of the deed, but he has lowered it to more trashy quibblings; he has brought it from the dignity of a legal discussion to the depravity of his effeminate mind. "Map" doubtless thought as he wrote his piece—"I am Sir Oracle! and I'll see if any dog dare bark." Never fear—barking is not our characteristic and as for the insults, running through the greater part of said article, no intelligent dog, however treated, would turn to reply, much less would an individual beg the space of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST for the truth he would have to write. We suppose "Map" has read his article since its publication, and we are still wondering, if after all he is exactly satisfied with it himself. Does he think the people are any wiser? As far as invective and insinuation is concerned, he is a success, but for reliable information, few will care to learn from him. After mixing facts and not facts, he closes with the following oily words: "If any one desires to respond to my article with a view to enlighten the public, without malice or abuse, I will hold myself responsible to answer any question touching the matter, in my own way and from my own standpoint, and leave the public to draw their own conclusions without malice to any, however they may differ."

What does "Map" mean?

After writing an article full of abuse, he offers to discuss the matter, "without malice and abuse," and yet "in his own way and from his own standpoint." We wish simply to reply to your last article, and say why we don't care to cross swords with you in any extended argument. We think you are superficial in your estimate of men and of facts. You say, "men usually make up their minds from appearances and are usually governed thereby, unless swerved by self-interests."

Men are not so foolish, and self-interests compel men to know what really is, rather than what appears. It is doubtless "Map's" way of coming to a conclusion, but intelligent men prefer, you study, to know what is the basis even of appearances. The title to the "City Park" may appear valid to "Map," but there are others who honestly believe the title and property belong to the present occupant, and their grounds for it are not on "men's appearances" either. While "Map" is putting on the war paint and arranging his plumes for the Modoc war he would initiate, we will notice some of his statements. First he explains about the map, giving its particular, &c. No one had ever disputed the existence of such a map as he describes. Others have seen it as well as he. It is a common secret. Two of the men who had the map made and help pay for it are now alive, but "Map" it seems has found out more about their business than they have known themselves. Not strange since his only ground is "men's appearances."

These men are still willing to stand by their map. Again "Map" lays grand stress about Mr. T. B. Stillman "being the man to do the business and the man entrusted to manage the whole affair." Records show that Mr. Stillman signed the deeds only, and that all the transactions done were mutual by the associates, in which the two responsible men now living heartily concurred with Mr. T. B. Stillman when, eighteen years ago, he sold the land and gave the deed, it was not a park that he sold, as the deed of the plot will show. If horse had been marked on this plot of land, would he have sold the horse or the land? In the conveyances of property there or elsewhere, no mention is made of "Park," and the question "Map" asks about "Title" under a supposed case, is answered by saying: "we expect a man to be governed in his boundary lines by his deed; nothing else can determine him."

Those who know Mr. T. B. Stillman were fortunate in knowing a man of great worth and entirely honorable; and while there are those who would admire him for so generous a gift to the public, others knowing him equally well place the utmost confidence in the act and intentions of the act of this man, in selling the land and the passage of the papers with it. Again "Map" speaks about "the streets and park being dedicated to the public." Will "Map" explain, how much of the time during Mr. Stillman's life this plot of land was actually used as a public park, and how much subsequently, and what right the Trustees of the College have heretofore exercised over this piece of property? A careful answer to these questions would at this time be of interest to all.

"Map" sneeringly insinuates that a "greenback laid across some men's eyes shut out all reason and common sense."—Has it yours, Mr. "Map?" We should judge in your case it would require only a single mill instead of a bill. It is possible for closing your eyes, and preparing you to swear upon general principles and "men's appearances."

At the close of an attempt to reason, this remarkable sentence is inserted: "Such men cannot have posted themselves very thoroughly upon the basis of our laws under a free Government." What is meant here by "free" Government? Has some one told him that he lives under a "free" Government and that free means a confiscation of all private property, just where any lawyer in an ex parte opinion says it may be done. This would not be a difficult matter for "Map" since "appearances" in the Park question favor him. Communism is doubtless his choice of Government.

Cuba may be "free" in that way, but Plainfield is not.

We, in closing, would request "Map" to be careful about the use of too much Scripture; he might have read about the "beam and the mote," "Thou shalt not steal," "Thou shalt not bear false witness," &c. We are under no obligations to discuss further with "Map." The entire question, pro and con, will come up before the Courts for settlement, all else must pass for mere opinion. If he has something more than public secrets, we shall read him with pleasure, but protest against serving up "appearances" in his own way, &c., for facts.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

Tuesday evening last Dr. Forrest A. Gillen, of Bound Brook performed a successful operation upon a young girl, Anna Hall, aged 12, at Bloomington, N. J., for Pleurisy, by tapping the chest and drawing from thence about two pints of water and liquid. Before that the child could scarcely breath and was in danger of suffocation.—After the operation the patient breathed free and continued to improve until next morning when she breathed quite natural, and there is now every prospect of a speedy recovery. Dr. Gillen is a young physician and starts out with a fair prospect of success.

ADV.

That "Park" Again.

MESSRS. EDITORS: I am not one of the stockholders, nor a trustee of the Young Ladies College "that sold the park"—but I have known some of them a long time—and more than one of them was kind to me long ago, when I was young and poor and friendless—and I dislike to see them traduced and abused.

Some of your readers were surprised that you should have permitted the person who signed the word "Map" to his deliverance in your last week's paper—to abuse and malign these persons under cover of defending the right of the city to the park. The charitable construction is, that you did not carefully read that production before printing it.

Such articles as the one in question are not calculated to do any good, and they never do any good, and if the writer of this one thinks he is aiding the cause of those who claim this piece of land as public property; he is probably very much mistaken.

One would scarcely expect to hear the Sacred Scriptures quoted in an article, with the spirit of this one, and yet I think this same Scripture tells us that on one occasion during a temptation in the wilderness—the Great Tempter quoted Scripture almost as glibly as the Great Being who was tempted.

But did the writer happen to think while his mind was on the Scriptures, of those other excellent maxims, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor"—"thou shalt not steal."

They are just as sound Scripture as the quotation about Cloak and the Coat, and just as applicable to the case in hand.—Indeed I can see no application of the Scripture quotation in "Maps" article, unless it be that, if the city succeeds in getting the park from these stockholders, it is their Scriptural duty to give it the College also.

So far as I have ever heard, these trustees and stockholders are about as respectable as the average of our citizens, (not including "Map" however) and now because they claim as their own property a lot that they have got a deed for and which they paid for, are they to be charged by somebody, overflowing with spleen—with being robbers and thieves, and having lost all traces of civilization and religion?

This writer says "if any one desires to respond to his article, without malice or abuse (just think of that readers) he will hold himself responsible to answer in his own way, &c."

Now I am not responding to his article at all. He need not think himself bound to answer in his own way this communication of mine, unless he feels moved to do so.

This article merely assumes to give expression to the average moral sense of this community as to the vulgar taste and malicious spirit of a writer who deals with the moral character of respectable citizens, as the Modoc deals with the person of his enemies, with tomahawk, scalping knife and burning brand, weapons not tolerated among civilized people.

If this restless individual can possibly possess his little soul in patience, until this question of "park" can be quietly and peaceably settled by the courts, he will have wrought a great victory over his own spirit; but if the frenzy of "writing for the papers" on this subject shall again attack him, with resistless severity, then let him send his production to the New York Sun, where he may be sure of finding congenial company.

COMMON SENSE.

For The Constitutionalist.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

In an article published by you last week over the title of "Insider," it is stated that many statements in "Outsider's" article are false. Now, as an ignorant outsider, I would like to know the truth. Hence, will "Insider" be kind enough to let the public know wherein "Outsider" was in error, that people may see through this much mooted question?

IGNORANT OUTSIDER.

PROCEEDINGS COMMON COUNCIL.

MONDAY EV'G, Aug. 7, 1876.

Council met pursuant to adjournment. All present except Mr. Harris.

Pres. Mr. Smith in chair.

The New Jersey Democratic State Executive Committee met in Trenton Tuesday, Aug. 8th. There was a full representation, and a great deal of interest was manifested in the coming campaign. The meeting of the State Convention, to select an electoral ticket, was called for the 13th of September, at Taylor's Hall, Trenton.

The Republicans found fault with the length of time Gov. Tilden took to make public his letter of acceptance, and now the document is before the public, they grumble because it is so long. Be easy, gentlemen, President Tilden is the coming man, not to please the friends of Grantism, but to relieve the country of its evils.

Genl Franz. Seigel and Charles Francis Adams have come out with letters endorsing the nomination of Tilden & Hendricks and promising to work for their election. Good, and still they come.

The Democracy of the ancient city of Perth Amboy are jubiant over the letters of acceptance of Tilden and Hendricks, and on Saturday evening organized an impromptu meeting in front of Buchanan's Hotel, with Ex-Mayor John Garretson, chairman. Speeches were made by Hon. Josephus Sharm, Col. A. W. Jones, and the chairman, which were loudly applauded. We also learn that on Saturday afternoon, a large and magnificent Banner, bearing the likenesses and names of Tilden and Hendricks, was suspended across the street in front of Buchanan's Hotel. Numerous Republicans are out-spoken in favor of Tilden and Reform, and from present indications Perth Amboy will double her usual Democratic majority.

Monday evening, 7th inst., being the regular meeting evening of the Young Men's Tilden and Hendricks Reform Club, lately organized in our city, found a well attended and interesting meeting of our active young Democrats at the spacious hall just opposite from the office of the Constitutionalist.

The ardor and earnestness with which the members of the Reform Club are exerting themselves in the interest of the organization, to effect a reform in the long-erring political sentiments of our city is a prominent and commendable characteristic of our young Democratic friends, and the already visible effects of this ardent exertion and manifested interest are certainly up to the anticipation of the most sanguine of its organization.

Several new members were added on Monday evening, and a large number of others were proposed for membership.

After finishing the business of the evening our fellow-citizen William B. Maxson, Esq., was called upon by the President for a few remarks. He was enthusiastically received, and, although he had not come with any intention of, nor preparation for making an address, he entertained the audience with a few telling remarks on the manner in which our government has been mismanaged in the past decade, closing with congratulations to the Club and thanks for the honorary membership. The meeting adjourned to meet again on Monday evening next.

CAUTION!

The undersigned would caution the public against using or sinking driven wells under Nelson W. Green's patent, unless the same are put down by him, as all parties using the same otherwise put down, or sinking such wells will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, he having the exclusive right to sink driven wells in Plainfield. The following is a decision recently rendered by Judge Benedict, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Wm. D. Andrews, owner of a patent granted to Col. Nelson W. Green, for a driven well, sued Theo. A. Carman some time ago to restrain him from the use of the patent in the manufacture of a similar well. The testimony filled over one thousand pages and counsel were over two weeks summing before Judge Benedict in Brooklyn. The patent is worth a million dollars. The well is an air-tight iron tube, driven into the ground until it reaches water-bearing stratum. An air pump is screwed on the top of the tube, and the other end is of steel, made sharp and perforated. Many thousands of the wells are in use. Carman is accused of using a similar well. Counsel for the defence contended that the patent was merely a new plan of more easily reaching the water bearing strata, and could not be held patentable. Judge Benedict held that the idea of forcing water from the earth into a well pit by artificial means was new, but was not patentable, but that the method by which the idea is made available was patentable. He decided that the infringement had been clearly proved.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

A SLIGHT MISUNDERSTANDING.

MAX ADELER, in The Illustrated Weekly.

In our town there are two families of Cadwalladers, and until a few weeks ago the head of each of them was named Henry. One Henry was a storekeeper and the other Henry was a butcher, and neither was related in any way to the other. About the middle of June the butcher died rather suddenly, but somehow the impression got out around town that it was the other Henry. Late one evening a wagon drove up in front of the living Cadwallader's house, and a man rang the bell. Cadwallader was in bed. He arose, opened the window and shouted:

"Who's there?"

"Me; Toombs!"

"Toombs! Who's Toombs? What d'you want?"

"Why, I've just run around with a load of ice for the old man. Let me in, so's I can fix him."

"Dunno what you mean. Nobody around here that wants fixing with ice. We're temperance people."

"No, No! I'm the undertaker. I brought it around to pack the old man in, so's he'll keep for a couple of days. Hurry up, sonny, I want to get done."

"What old man?"

"Why, Cadwallader. Don't you know, if he isn't laid in ice, he'll spoil before morning, and afflict his family like thunder."

"I guess you've struck the wrong house."

"Isn't this Henry Cadwallader's place?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, he's my man. I've got a coffin in here that'll fit him like a glove, after we've froze him up awhile. I dunno if anybody can git him up better for the sepulchre than I can; but I don't think so. Le'me in as quick as you can, and I'll show you the silver-plated handles and the mahogany trimmings. Queen Victoria don't want anything more gorgeous than them."

While Toombs was speaking another man came up and rang the bell, and Cadwallader asked him what he wanted.

"Want to see Mrs. Cadwallader about the tombstone."

"Tombstone! This is getting solemn! What tombstone?"

"Old Cadwallader's. Mr. Mix sent me round to ask whether he should cut the name 'Henry Cadwallader' in a straight line or a curve, and whether she wants to put on the stone a broken rosebud or a torch upside down. You tell the widder to take my advice and go in on the rosebud and the straight line. It's cheaper and 'twont make any difference to the corpse."

"I'll mention it to her. When is the tombstone to be done?"

"Wednesday, right after the funeral. Weighs about a ton. Mix says Mrs. Cadwallader probably wanted it heavy, so's to be sure it'd keep Henry down. He will have his fun."

During the conversation, and while Mr. Toombs was removing his funeral appliance from the wagon, a third man arrived. He asked for Mrs. Cadwallader.

"What do you want?" asked Mr. C.

"How's the widow takin' it? Hard?" he asked.

"Not so very."

"Well, you tell her; for me, not to go on about it. Plenty of fish in the sea 's good as any ever caught. Tell her the company's all right. It'll pay her in full, and then she can get on her feet again, and maybe consolidate with some better man."

"What company do you mean?"

"Why, the Hopelessly Mutual. I'm Benjamin P. Gunn, the insurance agent. Took his risk in January.—Thought may be the widow might be suffering from grief and I'd call to cheer her up. I'm coming to the funeral, and I'll see that Henry's stowed away as snug as a bug in a rug."

Cadwallader came down and explained the matter, and got things straightened out a little. On the day of the dead Henry's funeral he thought he would go to it in order to ascertain how it felt to attend the obsequies of Henry Cadwallader. It turned out that some of the live Henry's friends, who didn't know where he lived, were at the house of the dead man, thinking that it was the storekeeper's funeral.—When the letter came in, Mr. Jones met him and said to him:

"Heaven's and earth, Cadwallader! how'd you get out of that coffin?"

"I never was in it."

"What! I've been crying like a baby about you, in the parlor there. Not dead! Now see here, Cadwallader, this is not the square thing! Blame me if I haven't wasted an enormous amount of sacred emotion over you, and now you go back on me. Is that treating a man right.

"I dunno. Seems to me so."

"Well, hang me if it seems so to me. If you advertise that you are going to be buried, why in the name of Nebuchadnezzar don't you stand by your contract like a man?"

"Let me explain—"

"No, sir; no apologies. This lets you out, as far as I am concerned.—When I die, I die. I don't invite my friends to see me interred, get them to cry like thunder, and then come shuffling around with some shabby excuse about not being dead! I'd rather pick a man's pocket at once than trample on his feelings that way!"

And as Mr. Jones shouldered his umbrella and marched off home, Cadwallader went also, a little gloomy because he felt that if he had been a thoroughly conscientious man who understood his duty to society, he would be a corpse.—He is going to apply to the Legislature at the next session for permission to change his name.

During the late civil war Gen. Porter was let up in a balloon so that he might view the enemy's camp; when by some carelessness of those in charge of the ropes, the balloon got loose and went sailing over the enemy, but striking another current of air was safely returned and reached terra firma not far from where it started. The General stepped out coolly asked why they didn't send the flying artillery after him.

A RISKY ADVENTURE.

Some sixty-four years ago two old trappers and hunters who earned an honest livelihood with their guns and traps along the range of the blue ridge and short hill mountains, in catching mink, fox, and other wild game that was then quite plentiful. At a certain season of each year a small band of Indians used to take up their quarters in the vicinity of these old trappers' favorite grounds and their traps were often found sprung and nothing in them; they came to the conclusion that their traps were meddled with by one or more of these Indians, and they determined to put a stop to it with a little cold lead, therefore one cloudy, damp afternoon they adorned themselves in costume as much like the Indians as possible and started out to watch their traps, each taking a different direction. They strolled shyly through the woods and along Green Brook. One of them heard a little rustle in a clump of bushes in the vicinity of one of their traps, and he stepped behind a tree, but not until he was partially discovered by the object in the clump of bushes, who also sought a hiding place behind a tree.—Now the fun commenced, as either attempted to peer out from his place of safety a bullet would come whizzing along, peeling the bark from the edge of the tree and occasionally putting a hole through the blanket which swung from their shoulders. The firing was continued at intervals, each being very sparing of their ammunition, when darkness gradually crept in upon them and each stealthily took his departure for camp. The hunters arrived at their hut (which was built over the mouth of a cave—the same cave which was occupied by one Dave Rutman some few years ago) about the same time, and after taking a lunch, pulled out their pipes and commenced telling their day's adventure. Their stories corresponded with the above, and they discovered that they had been firing at each other, and with many a hearty laugh, congratulated each other on their narrow escape.

WHY NOT ATTEND CHURCH?

The principal reason that the majority of the people do not attend Church, is their mere habit of staying away.—It is not the lack of oratory or pulpit eloquence, for God has given the ministers of our city power and eloquence of speech to so clearly and distinctly set forth the truths of the gospel, that none who hear them cannot fail but to understand and be interested and instructed thereby.

Now to get the mass of the people to attend Church—there are probably as many methods as there are people. I would suggest that each church member or church going person adopt a method of his or her own of inducing others to attend church, and in course *of time, calling a meeting and each re*porting their particular method, and the method proving the most feasible to adopt. And I would further say to all, that I would like to have it to say, that we not only have a beautiful, pleasant and healthy city, but that the mass of the people attend divine service, and pay due respect to the Sabbath, that blessed day of rest which the Almighty has given us, and asks us to observe with due respect to His holy name.

There is nothing that pleases a minister of the Gospel so much as to see a full attendance at Church. It leaves the happy thought upon his mind that the word of God through him is appreciated, and he will exert himself to bring forth new ideas, and to more clearly define them.

Not long ago a young German saw a fortune in selling beer in the streets from a covered wagon, therefore he put in a couple of kegs, nailed a cash box up at the side and started. He met a small crowd at the corner of a street and commenced his sales, which were quite lively. During the mean time one of the crowd cut a hole in the side of the wagon next to the cash box and took the money out, and went around and treated with it. This was continued until the beer was gone. Then the German drove off, counted his fortune, and immediately retired from business.

A blacksmith who runs his forges by several large hand-power bellows, needed help and advertised "blowers wanted, address T. Hig, Squedunk post office." Mr. H. says he received 1,500 letters, from book agents, tea dealers, politicians, musicians and others. He became disgusted, but cooled down and finally accepted the politicians, they being Republicans, and he now says for blowing and forging they surpass his most sanguine expectations.

They were sitting together, he and she, and he was arduously thinking what to say. Finally, he burst out with: "In this land of noble achievements and undying glory, why it is that women do not come more to the front; why is it that they do not climb the ladder of fame?" "I suppose," said she, putting her finger in her mouth, "It is all on account of their pull-backs."

A very daring Kentucky girl lately rode her horse close up to the edge of a yawning chasm and proudly defied any gentleman of the party to follow her example. Not a soul stirred except one youth, who boldly backed his horse into the same position, and standing on his head in the saddle, dared her to do the same. She concluded not to.

A colored "pusson" at Penny Orchard the other day saw the balloon, (the first thing of the kind he ever saw) and became very frightened, and ran and told all he met that the angel Gabriel was preparing to light on the top of the mountain.

A Detroit mother can't understand how it is that her girls can play croquet for half a day and not feel tired, and yet, if one of them is asked to wash the dishes she reaches for the camphor bottle.

Dubs, who is somewhat of a drinking man, says he likes Boston on account of the crooked streets, for he says the police can't tell whether he's "tight," or merely trying to follow the line of the street.

NEW JERSEY
Enamel Paint Company,
RARITAN, NEW JERSEY.
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either in side or outside work or boat painting than any oth*er Paint known to the* trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use,
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.
Liberal Inducements to Dealers.
And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.

Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price List and Sample Color Card, Address,

GORDON'S FOOD
FOR
Horses, Cattle and Poultry.

Used in Europe for 12 Years.
Horses fed on this system are always in a good and healthy condition. Cows give as much milk as when fed on the rich Spring grass.

493 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J., March 16, 1876.—Mr. H. S. Spicer—Dear Sir: In reply to your inquiry I have been using your Gordon Food for some time and am satisfied with the result. I had a horse whose glands were much swollen, and after using this food for a few weeks he became quite well, which I attribute entirely to said Food. I shall continue to use it as a profitable food to keep my horses in good condition. It produces perfect digestion and purifies the blood. Yours truly,
W. A. BRINTZINGHOFFER.

ATLANTIC STABLES, BOARDING AND SALE, Nos. 16 and 18 ATLANTIC ST., NEWARK, N. J., March 16, 1876.—Mr. H. S. Spicer—Dear Sir: I have used the Gordon Food for six months. I believe it to be a good article and all it is recommended for.
Yours respectfully, E. W. FELOUSET.

J., on Wednesday, the 16th day of August A. D., 1876, at two o'clock p. m. of said day, all the following described land and premises, situate, lying and being in the city of Plainfield, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey:

The First Tract—Beginning at a point in the northeasterly line of Milton Place, at the corner of lot number (30), as shown on a certain map of J. Raymond's property, on file in the Union County Clerk's office, in block B; thence running in a southeasterly course fifty feet to a stake and corner of the Davis lot; thence running along that lot in a southwesterly course, two hundred and twenty five feet, more or less, to a stake in the line of Milford Cole's land; thence running in a northwesterly course along his line eighty and five tenths feet to the southeasterly line of Milton Place; thence along the line of the same to a northeasterly course two hundred and twenty-five feet, more or less, to the place of beginning—together with the land in front of the same, in the centre of Milton place, to be used as a public street.

The Second Tract—Being known as lots (62 and 63) sixty-two and sixty-three, on sheet one (1), on the Wooden Place, as per map of said Geiger; each lot being twenty-five feet front and rear by about one hundred feet deep, bounded as follows:

Beginning at a stake in the west side of Lake avenue, being a corner of lot sold to M. Gisler, No. 61; thence westerly about one hundred feet to Manning Stelle's line; thence northerly with his line fifty feet (50) feet to a stake; thence southerly parallel with first line, and at right angles with Lake avenue, about one hundred feet, more or less, to the west side of Lake avenue; thence with Lake avenue southerly fifty (50) feet to the place of beginning.

POETRY.

ONLY A TRAMP.

BY GEORGE H. CHEEVER.

'Twas a "Lightning Express"—we were four minutes late—
But a run of ten miles on a road that is straight
Gives a chance to make up, and, as being first class—
None but ladies and gents—I determined to pass
The way station ahead just exactly on time.
"Fire up!"—this to Jim—and the musical chime
Of the click-clack of wheels quickly signaled the rate!
We were jumping along was a sixty-mile gait.
"Look ahead there!" cried Jim; "there's a man 'cross the track!
Shall I whistle 'down brakes'?" "No; I will not hold back—
Let him care for himself!" And a half minute more
Came a bump—and the roadway was spattered with gore!

* * * * * *

Yes, an inquest was held and the Coroner's stamp
Covered, "Killed by the Engine—he was only a Tramp!"

* * * * * *

Who said he was starving! and pray who can tell
That in searching for work he, exhausted, there fell?
A wife and four little ones, near by in the camp?
Bah! the verdict's recorded—'twas "only a Tramp!"

* * * * * *

My own brother, you say!—he hath left years ago!
No; that were too terrible—cannot be so!

* * * * * *

My brain is on fire—though my forehead is wet;
There's a tug at my heart and my jaws are close set;
Is this madness? no, no! see the Coroner's stamp
Covers, "Killed by the Engine—he was only a Tramp!"

TWO IN THE CAMPAGNA.

BY ROBERT BROWNING.

I would that you were all to me,
You that are just so much, no more—
Nor yours, nor mine—nor slave, nor free!
Where does the fault lie? what the core
Of the wound, since the wound must be?

I would I could adopt your will,
See with your eyes, and set my heart
Beating by yours, and drink my fill
At your soul's springs—your part, my part
In life, for good and ill.

No. I yearn upward—touch you close,
Then stand away. I kiss your cheek,
Catch your soul's warmth—I pluck the rose,
And love it more than tongue can speak—
Then the good minute goes.

Already how am I so far
Out of that minute? Must I go
Still like the thistle-ball, no bar,
Onward whenever light winds blow,
Fixed by no friendly star?

Just when I seemed about to learn!—
Where is the thread now? Off again!
The old trick! Only I discern—
Infinite passion and the pain
Of finite hearts that yearn.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

MORT'S DREAM-PICTURE.

"It was a dream within a dream, I tell you, Charlie. I was asleep in my bed in the next room, and then I dreamed that I was visiting the Randolph's over in Berkshire county. I thought I had been up pretty late, playing billiards with Cale Randolph and some of the boys. I remember distinctly scoring seventy-eight on a run—four-ball game. Well, I went to bed tired out, dressed I did; fell asleep, and dreamed this which I call a dream within a dream."

"Well, Mort," said I, "the thing is not so extraordinary after all. It is a common enough psychological phenomenon."

"I beg your pardon," quoth Mort Amerman, satirically, "would you be good enough to reel me off a little of that last again, please? Say a couple of fathoms, or so."

"None of your chaffing," said I, "but tell me what has all this Chinese dream-puzzle to do with the picture that you promised to show me?"

"Much, O Sahib! for on the silent yet speaking canvas have I depicted the scene whereof I speak, and now le voici;" and with that he threw the covering from the painting on his easel, and left me to examine it at my leisure, while he went to his bed-room. The easel was of course in the best position in the studio for viewing the picture, and the soft, delicate light of the autumn afternoon lay full upon it; mellowed, however, by an artful arrangement of screens and shadows, to gain the precise effect desired.

The painting was of the ordinary cabinet-size, and appropriately painted, being also relieved by heavy maroon drapery, gracefully festooned behind and around it. I am not of those who believe that a truly master-work of art may be described aptly in words, yet I must essay the task for this once, and if I render only the bald outlines of the artist's thought it may be, perchance, that I shall still be enabled to convey some glimmering of his meaning.

What first fastened itself upon me was the murky darkness of most of the scene. There was a dense and gloomy forest filling up the entire back-ground and much of the middle distance. Out from among that under the [illegible] a wild torrent, and plunged over ragged rocks, and through and about the gnarled roots, and between rifts in the solid stone, and so down to a leaping cascade that disappeared at the extreme right in a black and gloomful pool.—Stretching back from the right, a broad expanse of gray moor extended in prospective sight to the base of a range of blue-gray hills, that towered aloft into the clouds; a narrow path wound through this moor into the dim distance, and was lost, apparently, in the shades of night, which were fast falling.

On the very edge of a bold rock that jutted over the pool, and on the very boundary of the water-fall, was the only seemingly living object of the picture.

A young man prostrate on his knees, shading his eyes with his two hands, and gazing intently into the pool beneath.

There was that in the attitude of the figure, so deftly and truthfully expressed by the artist, that sense and meaning grew upon me as I gazed. He was agonizing—distraught. His whole soul was looking forth from his eyes, and seeking in the dim twilight, now fast fading to wrest from the obscurity beneath him some terrible secret.—So closely was the story told, that my gaze instinctively followed his, and tracked, as his mind have, the secret of the black pool.

Twining about the base of the rock, upon whose crest the young man knelt, a meshed and tangled warp of roots and fibres first met the eye. But now, clinging with a death grasp to the largest of these, I saw the round fair arm of a young girl—and then—and as though I should have seen it, and nothing else, from the first, so completely did it now fill the picture; I saw the white figure—limp white garments clinging to the body, and the fair white face, with rich golden hair floating and tangled, on the water and among the roots and could almost note the swaying to and fro of the soulless form, as it was caught by the eddies, and dragged hither and thither; still held, however, by that trusty dead arm that clung so determinedly to the slimy and black root above.

A touch on my shoulder so startled me that I cried out; it was only Mort, who had entered the room [illegible], so intent was I in my contemplation.

"Well, what do you think of it?" was the first and most natural question.

"[illegible] never could have dreamed that," said I.

"Just as you see it, dreamed I it, doubter. Now let me cover it up; and let us go and have some lunch."

"But don't be in such a hurry!" I said, seeking to stop him, as he again shrouded the painting beneath its cover. "I have not half seen it yet."

But muttering, "some other time," he persisted in hiding it from me, and we presently went to lunch together.

Now, I was in nowise satisfied with my friend's reticence, and experienced a very vivid curiosity to hear the particulars of his wonderful dream, which he had so graphically limned upon the canvas; but no effort of mine could induce him to say more concerning it than that it occurred to him just as he had painted it.

The painting was sent to the Academy for exhibition that season, and was sold to a particular friend of mine for a goodly sum—for so much, in fact, that I often joked Mort on his dream-picture, and the fortune it had brought to him; for it really seemed as though its sale was the beginning of a season of great prosperity.

The winter and spring passed, and as summer came and the city began to empty itself by car loads and steamboatfuls into the country, Mort and I, with a party of other artists like him, or idlers like myself, made up a trip to the Adirondacks. It is needless for the purpose of this story that I should detail our sundry adventures during the weeks we passed among the lakes and hills; nor need I relate our experience with fish and flesh in our numerous hunting and fishing excursions.

We met many acquaintances, and made many new ones, and among the latter were the family of Mr. Sanfield, a merchant from Montreal, who, with his wife and daughter, with the affianced husband of the latter, was passing a few weeks in the search for rest and relaxation from his customary labors.

Alice Sanfield was beautiful, a pet of Canadian society, wealthy in her own right, as well as by prospective heirship, and altogether a "catch." Her lover was an officer in the British army, stationed at Montreal, and now on leave—a fine-looking and gentlemanly young fellow, of good family, and apparently desperately in love with Miss Sanfield.

Captain Rowland had, however, one peculiarity, which he displayed on several occasions very prominently, and which led Mort to remark to me one day, when it had been more than usually manifest, that he thought the captain would lead Miss Alice rather a lively dance when she should become Mrs. Rowland. He had, in fact, about the most uncontrollable temper I ever saw displayed in a man. So violent was he at times, that I commonly wondered why he had not long before got himself shot for intemperate insolence in one of his fits of passion. Another peculiarity of his was evinced in frequent lonely wanderings quite away from the hotel, from which journeys he would not return for days together.—These disappearances were accounted for by the captain by various sporting excuses, and we certainly should have felt no interest in them, had it not been for the incident which I will now relate.

One day Mort and I started off on a trip on our own account, ostensibly for fishing purposes, but really for my friend to obtain a sketch of a charming vista which had not as yet been discovered by his lynx-eyed associates. Our journey led us some twenty miles from the hotel; we traveled a portion of the way in an open wagon, and then footed it toward the point desired.

On our route we passed a pretty farm-house, which we eyed with the gratification which such rural scenes always afforded us, and should have thought no more of it had we not suddenly espied Captain Rowland, accompanied by a young lady, engaged in earnest and apparently excited conversation. The lady was seated on a little knoll a hundred yards or so from the house, and the captain stood beside her, leaning with one hand on the tree beneath whose shade she sat listening to his words. We were out of sight of them in a moment, and with a few remarks as to Miss Sanfield's probable appreciation of the scene if she had witnessed it, we continued on our way.

Guides had preceded us with a tent and sundry appurtenances, and on reaching the spot selected for our encampment we found these duly arrived and in order, and located ourselves for the night, Mort intending to make his sketch the next morning.

It was a bright, starlight evening; we were located just on the edge of a pretty, brawling brook, and as we sat, after a delicious trout supper, smoking our pipes and chatting lazily, we felt about as comfortable as was practicable. Twilight had faded suddenly, and just as the stars became rather necessary for illuminating purposes, a shrill scream startled us from our seats on an old log, and thrilled us to our very marrows.

One of the guides said,—

"That was a woman's scream, and near by."

Then we dashed in the direction of the sound, which led us straight down the course of the brook. A few moments brought us to the outlet of the little stream, and as Mort and I turned a projecting rock we came upon a thrilling scene indeed.

Mort saw it first, and crying, "My dream! my dream! he fell flat on his face in a dead faint. And as I stood over him, leaning forward, the moon shown full upon the original of the painting I had seen in Mort's studio in New York.

Here was the cascade and the black pool; there were the gray moor and the distant mountains. The gnarled roots and fibres twisted together far beneath me in the clasp of a fair white arm, and the white figure rose and fell with the rise and fall of the running stream. And on the bank opposite, prostrate on his knees, shading his eyes with his hands, while he peered into the rocky chasm, was Captain Rowland.

Even as I looked he rose to his feet, and, throwing his hands wildly in the air, fled from the scene. The noise of the falling water had prevented him from observing our approach, and it was impossible for us to reach him. It took us a full quarter of an hour to get to the bottom of the little ravine and longer yet are our united efforts could draw the poor young creature to the bank. We took her to the little farm-house, which was about a quarter of a mile away; and then, leaving the guides to follow with our traps, we pushed rapidly to our wagon. The next evening we reached the hotel, Mort nearly crazy with excitement, and I not in a much better condition.

Now I had not informed the old farmer and his wife of having seen Rowland. Neither had I told the guides, who had come up too late to see him.

To each and all of these I simply related the finding of the body of the young lady, who proved to be from Montreal visiting the old farmer who was a connection of hers.

I acted thus on both reason and impulse, which worked together in this wise:

Impulse and reason both agreed that as he [illegible] being but Captain Rowland knew how the young lady came to her death, any story which he—Captain Rowland—saw fit to tell must necessarily be accepted. Impulse alone suggested to me a possible means for discovering the truth of the occurrence, and as Mort had not seen the captain, but only the body and its surroundings, which so recalled his dream, I had only to keep my own counsel—and I did. The farmer and his wife assumed that she must have wandered into the woods, as was her custom, and fallen accidentally into the pool, and I did not attempt to change their opinion.—They knew nothing of her having had any visitor that afternoon, and I left them mourning for the sad accident, and the painful duty which had fallen upon them, of communicating the awful tidings to the young lady's friends in Montreal.

At the hotel, the first persons whom we saw were the Sanfields, accompanied, as usual, by Captain Rowland. He seemed in his customary frame of mind, and, as I started a messenger with a telegram for New York, I ground my teeth in rage that time must elapse before I could expose him.

Two days later a package came to me by private hand, and that same evening I invited a number of gentlemen including Captain Rowland to come to my room and examine a rare painting. They came, the captain in excellent spirits, holding his eye-glass in readiness.

The painting stood upon an easel, and was shrouded with black velvet. Candles with reflectors, arranged in front of it, threw a brilliant light upon the gloomy covering. The gentlemen were arranged in a semi-circle in front of the easel. Captain Rowland in the centre, and I drew aside the velvet covering.

I saw Rowland start as though he had been stung; he gave a yell which was positively inhuman, and sprang for the door.—There he found me with a revolver pointed at his face, and in two minutes he was in the custody of two detective officers from New York.

That evening he confessed everything.—Entangled with the poor girl, he had vainly tried to buy her silence, that he might marry the rich Miss Sanfield. Failing in that, he had lured the girl to accompany him in a walk through the woods, and had there pushed her into the pool.

I hoped to have the pleasure of seeing him satisfactorily executed according to law, but in this he defeated justice. He bit a hole in his arm while confined in the prison awaiting his trial, and bled to death.

Thus Mort's dream-picture turned State's evidence but as to the secret power by which this silent but sufficient witness was created, months before the incident it depicted had occurred—I give it up.

A LUCKY LARCENY.

Mr. Courtney was a rich old bachelor, and the uncle of a couple of nephews—the one a brother's, the other a sister's son. These two were his next of kin, legally entitled, in case he died intestate, to inherit his property.

Edward Horton, his deceased sister's son, was decidedly his favorite, and to him the old gentleman resolved to give the bulk of his estate.

Charles Courtney, the other nephew, had inherited a handsome fortune from his father, and moreover, by his uncle's will, was entitled to succeed to that left to his cousin, in the event of the latter's dying without issue.

Old Mr. Courtney was one of the haleist of bachelors, when it was suddenly announced, not only that he was dead, but that foul play was suspected. A post mortem examination demonstrated that he had fallen a victim to poison; and it was given out that the hand that administered it was that of his favorite nephew. The public mind was naturally both surprised and shocked.

It was not until Edward Horton had been fully committed for trial for his uncle's murder that I was retained to get up the defense.

His own statement was, in substance, this: A physician had been called in to see Mr. Courtney on the occasion of some apparently trifling sickness, requiring some simple remedy, for which a prescription was written and handed to the prisoner to have made up. This the latter had carried to a well known competent druggist, who had put it up in his presence. This medicine consisted of three white powders, each folded in a scrap of paper, and the whole inclosed in a single wrapper. They were to be given at intervals of an hour, and had remained continuously in the prisoner's possession till the first was administered, which was done by himself, immediately upon his return from the druggist's. Mr. Courtney grew rapidly worse; and when, at the expiration of an hour, a second powder was administered, the symptoms became so alarming that a messenger was dispatched for the physician, who, on his arrival, declared that the patient was suffering from the effect of poison. An examination of the remaining powder disclosed the fact that it was pure arsenic. It was too late for any antidote to be available; and in less than an hour death had relieved the sufferer. An autopsy of the body and an analysis of the contents of the stomach left no doubt as to the cause of death. The presence of arsenic, in a necessarily fatal quantity, was indicated by every known chemical test. It was further admitted by the prisoner that he alone had access to his uncle's apartment or had handled the medicine from the time it was compounded by the druggist till the coming of the physician, after the second powder had taken.

The druggist, who was known to be a man of extraordinary caution and thoroughly skilled in his business, was ready to swear that by no possibility could any mistake have occurred in putting up the medicine.

To make matters worse, it transpired that the amicable relations between the uncle and nephew had been somewhat disturbed of late, by reason of an attachment of the latter disapproved by the former, who had gone so far as to threaten to change his will unless his wishes were respected.

"Who was in company with you from the time you received the medicine till you returned to your uncle's house?" I asked the prisoner, desperately groping after something to afford a ray of hope.

"No one," he answered, "but my cousin Charles, whom I met near the druggist's, and who accompanied me in."

I drew from Edward the fact that Charles saw the medicine put up; walked with him a little way; then went back for something, Edward awaiting his return; then walked arm in arm nearly home. Then Charles left. I also reminded Edward that, his uncle being dead, if he also should die childless, Charles would inherit the whole estate.

"He did it!" the young man cried, in a paroxysm of excitement too earnest to be counterfeit. "He went out to get the poison when he left me waiting. He put it to resemble the druggist's parcel, for which he substituted it as we went along. Villain—I know it now! I carried the parcel in the right pocket of my overcoat, and it was on that side he walked!"

I was seated in my office on the day preceding that fixed for the trial, indulging but sanguine expectations, when a tap at the door announced a visitor. It was a detective whom I had employed.

"What is it?" I inquired, after closing the door.

"I made an arrest to-day," he answered, "and in the prisoner's possession found this overcoat," undoing a package he had brought.

"Well?"

"In one of the pockets I found this," and he handed me a small parcel which I opened.

Inside were three papers, folded as druggists put up their prescriptions.

"The person with whom I found this coat," the detective continued, "confesses that he stole it from a billiard saloon, the owner having laid it aside while playing; and the date he fixes corresponds with Mr. Courtney's murder. But what is more important, I have ascertained that Charles Courtney is the owner of the coat!"

"Let us at once proceed to the druggist's," I exclaimed, springing from my chair and snatching up my hat.

We were soon there.

"Please examine that parcel," I said, putting it into the hands of the druggist.

He did so, carefully opening the papers and inspecting their contents. They contained three white powders!

"How do they correspond with those you made up for Mr. Courtney," I inquired, "and for which others seem to have been so mysteriously substituted!"

"They do not correspond at all," he answered; "they are the same."

"The same! How do you know that!"

"By these figures," he replied, pointing to the inside of one of the papers." "I had made a calculation that day on the sheet of paper, part of which I used in putting up the prescription bought my Mr. Edward Horton. The remainder I have preserved, not knowing but it might become important. Here it is, and you see how this piece and the figures fit it."

They did exactly; the chain of evidence was complete!

I need hardly tell how the trial ended.—Charles Courtney was called by the prosecution to prove some unimportant point. The counsel whom I had retained for the defense asked him but three questions on cross-examination:

"Had he accompanied the prisoner from the druggist's?"

"Had he lost an overcoat that day?"

"Was that it?"

The questions were very simple, but the effect on the witness was most remarkable. He trembled, and turned pale. He knew his secret was out, and lying was useless.—He answered all three questions in the affirmative, but in a voice scarcely audible. Before the next witness was called he slipped from the court, and was never heard of afterwards.

With the testimony of the detective and the druggist, not forgetting that of the thief who stole the overcoat, we made short work of what had promised to be "a beautiful case of circumstantial evidence."

A SOLDIER'S PECULIARITIES.

WHAT ONE WHO KNEW HIM HAS TO SAY OF GEN. CUSTER.

But why, it may be asked, did Custer not apply his knowledge of Indian life and ways in the battle of the Little Horn? No one will ever know. But the most reasonable inference is that he was betrayed by his own self-confidence. The supposition of those familiar with Custer's character is that he arrived first in the enemy's country, and when he saw the enemy before him, with his confidence in himself and his men, he dashed upon them without waiting for co-operation, and was destroyed by superior numbers in a position that was disadvantageous to him and advantageous to his foes. Custer loved a fight, and was jealous of opportunities; and this led him to his fearful mistake.

In the Stanley expedition to the Yellowstone in 1873 a similar occurrence took place. Stanley was in command, his headquarters being with the supply train. Custer commanded the advance, and under Stanley's orders was to keep 10 or 12 miles ahead of the main column. One day Custer discovered fresh Indian trails, and disregarding orders, followed them up till he found this same Sitting Bull and his warriors, and attacked them. He won a brilliant victory and sent a report of the battle back to Stanley. The latter returned a rebuke for Custer's disobedience and positive instructions to go into camp to await his, Stanley's arrival. The courier caught Custer in pursuit of Sitting Bull. The orders were not read until another opportunity for a battle had been seized and another victory gained. Custer risked his reputation as an officer, risked his chances of disgrace, risked all the consequences of disobedience for the mere love of fight. He was thrown into arrest as soon as Stanley arrived at his camp, and an embroilment occurred which is army talk to this day. This characteristic of Custer made him unpopular with his superior officers.

Custer's strong points as a soldier were his almost unapproachable bravery, his dash, ardor, confidence, and his self-possession and composure, that was never shaken in the most desperate resorts. I have seen Custer in circumstances when it was hard for me to believe that he was human, and I am confident that when overwhelmed and surrounded in that ravine and staring death squarely in the face, he loaded the Remington rifle he always carried as coolly and aimed it as accurately as if he had been target shooting on the parade ground at his post.

Yet I have seen tears in his eyes that were drawn out by the sufferings of a dog. One of the tender points in his nature was his sympathy for brutes. He never allowed an animal to be abused or to suffer in any way if it was in his power to prevent it.—I have seen him dismount robust men from half-starved horses, and have heard him order soldiers punished for abusing beasts.—It used to be a remark commonly made in his regiment that Custer would turn a wounded soldier out of his ambulance to let a sick dog ride. But this is an exaggeration.

Many people have the idea that Custer was a rough, swaggering, swearing, drunken trooper. He was as dainty a beau in ladies' society and as entertaining a guest at a dinner table as one often sees. For years he never drank even the lightest wines. He used to in the earlier years of the war, but to his wife's sweet influence he surrendered the habit, and became not only temperate himself but the apostle of temperance. He never swore, nor would he allow an oath to be uttered in his hearing. I have heard him rebuke his officers many a time for swearing, and for one of his soldiers to utter an oath in his presence was the grossest sort of insubordination. Cavalry and profanity seem somehow to be coessentials, but it was not so in Custer's case.

Another anomaly was that he never used tobacco in any form. Think of a trooper without a plug and a pipe in his pocket.

IT SLIPPED.

Joseph Strong was on his way to the Centennial. He couldn't explain where he was on his way from, but thought it was from Brewster Street, He got down as far as Atwater Street, and there met a man who told him he could have twice as good a time by going to the Black Hills. They went into a saloon to find a map of the Hills, but the saloon-keeper hadn't any. The stranger said they would start from Whiskey Point as a beginning, and he called for the decanter with a cob cork in it, Joseph didn't want any strong drink. He has always hated liquor ever since he was two hours old, but he did take a look at the decanter to see whether there were any spring doors in it.

"And, naturally enough, you were found lying on the walk about two hours afterward," said his Honor.

"It was over three hours," protested the prisoner.

"An hour on a drink makes no difference in the eyes of the law. I suppose you plead guilty?"

"No sir; I didn't."

"The officers here, who drew you along the floor by the leg because you were dead drunk, will all testify that you couldn't lift a finger."

"Perhaps I'd been run over," suggested the prisoner.

"Show me some bruises to prove it."

The prisoner started to pull off his coat, drew it on again, and wanted to know if the case couldn't be adjourned until after the Fourth.

"Yes, sir, it can," replied the court; "I'll adjourn you on a sentence of sixty days, and if that isn't long enough you can have an extra month tacked on."

"If I was drunk, then the whiskey slipped down me when I wasn't looking!" exclaimed the man.

"You should have been looking," was the curt reply, and Joseph went in and hauled the other man off the pail.—Detroit Free Press.

THE ROBBER'S FOE.

A few years ago in the City of New York a set of official robbers obtained control of municipal affairs. They were able and artful, and led on by a mercenary politician named Tweed; they plundered the Treasury right and left and even defied interference.

They were Democratic thieves.

Two Democratic citizens resolved that the infamous gang should be overthrown, the public interests protected, and the good name of the party preserved.

Those two citizens worked day and night for the cause of public justice.—They searched out evidence of guilt, boldly prosecuted and re-prosecuted, until the robbers were dispersed, some behind prison bars and others to perpetual banishment.

The den of thieves was broken up, honest municipal government re-established, and the Democratic party vindicated.

The names of those two Democratic citizens are SAMUEL J. TILDEN and CHARLES O'CONNOR.

One of them, Mr. Tilden, is now Governor of the State of New York, and in that capacity has ended the career of another plundering gang known there as the Canal Ring.

He is also the Democratic candidate for President of the United States, and if elected, will scatter the hordes of official corruptionists that swarm the land and fatten upon ill gotten gain.

They are Republican thieves.

Governor Tilden is the very man the public welfare now demands at the Presidential helm,

VOTE FOR TILDEN!

GUILTY.

President Grant's Secretary of War Belknap prostituted his high official position, disgraced the American name, and criminated himself, by appointing a Post Trader for a money consideration and accepting the bribe.

The crime was clearly proven, and not only that, it was admitted by the offender to be a true charge.

He resigned, and the President, instead of saying to him—"sir, you are a public corruptionist and should suffer the penalty, I will suspend you from office, subject to legal proceedings,"—accepted his resignation and thereby wove an artifice to aid his escape.

The House of Representatives properly, and in due time, submitted to the Senate articles of impeachment against the corrupt Secretary.

After a trial of the case Impeachment failed for the want of a two-third vote. Thirty-five Senators, including thirteen Republicans, and even Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania, voted guilty, but, in violation of duty so plain, and evidence so positive, the Republican Senator from New Jersey, Mr. Frelinghuysen, by his recorded vote declared the official bribe taker not guilty.

It behooves the people of New Jersey to remember that strange vote of their Republican Senator, and when he comes up for re-election, to render just judgment for an act so repugnant to truth and dishonorable to the State.

THE REAL ISSUE.

The war ended a dozen years ago, and the Southern people accepted its result as a final arbitrament. From the editorials and speeches of many Republicans of to-day one might suppose hostilities still existed.

The sham won't detract attention from the living issue of this Presidential campaign.

Morton's bloody shirt cannot hide the proven corruption of the National Administration.

White-washing Belknap and Babcock will not bid the horrid blotches disappear.

Nominating Hayes is not repudiating Grantism.

The political gangrene engendered at Washington permeates every official branch.

Reform is the only remedy.

Reform thorough and practical, from President to village Post Master, through the Army, through the Navy, and through the Department of Finance.

Reform is the real issue, and the people hail it with joy.

A COLLOQUY.

"What for you steal dat hay fork ob mine, Pete?"

"Because, Julius, I hab a right to take it."

"Who gub you a right to propriate oder peoples' property, you brack vagabond."

"Don't get mad, Julius, and I'll jest luminate to you de situation of de circumstance. You see, Julius, dat fork am now de chosen emblem of our spected Republicum party, and doin crooked tings, or in oder words, laying hands on all you can, am in no degree adverse to de principles of dat great politicum organization at whose head shines de mortal Belknap and around whose tail Babcock mits a brilliant ray."

"O, dry up, you calle'd gas pipe, guv me back dat hay fork, and den go and be an honest man by voting de Democratic ticket."

THEN AS NOW.

When Jackson ran for President he was personally assailed by opposing partisans in the most vindictive manner. No calumny too base or falsehood too fiendish were left unuttered, and even the sanctity of domestic life was invaded by the political hyenas of that day, in their eagerness to defeat the bold champion of official integrity and popular rights.

What was the result?

The more Jackson was abused higher he arose in the estimation of the people.

The masses of the people were then honest, they are now honest, and well able to distinguish between a truth and a partisan lie.

Then as now.

As with Jackson, so it will be with Tilden.

SLANDER AND ITS EFFECT.

The Republican journals teem with libelous personal attacks upon the Democratic candidates for President and Vice President, and some of them to an extent disgracefully vile.

Such kind of political warfare makes opposing votes, because it is disgusting to thousands of honorable minded Republicans who respect truth and despise falsehood.

A party that has no other argument than personal defamation is fast going to the wall. A cause that needs slander to uphold it cannot stand. Its end draws nigh, and respectable citizens will have no tears to shed.

NORTH PLAINFIELD DEMOCRACY.

At the head of our first column on this page will be found the call issued by the Democratic Executive Committee of the Fourth Congressional District for holding a Convention on the 31st of August to nominate a candidate for Congress, also the call of the Chairman of the County Executive Committee of Somerset, announcing the time and places of holding Township Primaries to elect delegates to attend said Convention, the date of holding the North Plainfield Primary being set at Saturday, August 26th. Our Democratic friends of North Plainfield should on that occasion attend the Primary and select good men as their representatives. Let there be no bickerings or favoritism shown but let honest and untrammelled men be selected to represent North Plainfield in the Convention. That is what is needed to insure the nomination of a candidate for the Congressional honors of the Fourth District that will be elected after his nomination. This is no time for play but for action, and good men must be selected to fill the minor offices on the ticket headed by the great Reformer, Samuel J. Tilden, and his co-laborer, Thomas A. Hendricks. We have all confidence that our Democratic friends "over the brook" will see that this want is supplied and when election time comes will give a good account of themselves by rolling up a handsome majority for their ticket.

The Senatorial and Congressional Conference Committees upon the "River and Harbor Appropriation Bill," have come to an agreement at last, and the bill has been passed. By the provisions of the bill $5,000,000 are appropriated for the benefit of the Rivers and Harbors in the Eastern portion of the United States alone; also an item of $40,000 to the use of the Secretary of War for surveys. This, of course, is exclusive of the vast amount appropriated in the same bill for other portions of the country. The measure was a compromise between a Republican Senate determined to swell the amount, and a Democratic House of Representatives endeavoring to curtail unnecessary expenditures. If, however, this large amount of money, that is to be wrung from the people engendering taxes, could be economically expended by a Reform Administration, instead of being squandered by the hordes of profligate proteges of his Royal Highness, U. S. G., the deserving laboring classes would be benefited thereby, and the Rivers and Harbors would receive substantial improvements.

A Wisconsin editor has faith that Tilden and Hendricks will be elected, and he manifests by publicly advertising the following offer: "Any citizen of Monroe county, not a subscriber of the Monroe county Republican, and considered responsible for $2, can have this paper mailed to him, commencing July 4, 1876, to be paid when Tilden and Hendricks are elected President and Vice President of the United States. No Tilden, no pay. Walk right up, gentlemen, and don't be afraid of beating us out of the paper."

It is said that there are not less than 100,000 persons in the city of New York who depend upon their daily earnings for their daily bread; and that, incredible as it may appear, nearly one-half of that great number are without employment of any kind whatever.

Gives us four years more of the Grant-Hayes dynasty and the other fifty thousand will also be without work or bread.

The Methodist statistics show 19,257 M. E. Sunday Schools, 207,182 teachers and 1,406,168 scholars in the United States.

REFORM.

The great question before the country is the Reform of the Administration in all its branches, the restoration of the supremacy of the law over all the officers of the government being one of the most vital points at issue. The selection of a man, as President, who possesses the qualifications necessary for this important work is the task which lies before us in November. Of the two men who have been in nomination there can be no doubt in whom the fitness resides. Governor Tilden has so well displayed his ability to cope with the prevailing forms of corruption, and his courage and determination in doing it, that the men who have been enriching themselves at the people's expense throughout the country are alarmed at the prospect of his authority being extended to all quarters of the Republic. His legal training, to which an objection has been raised, has led to a development of the kind of talent, which is peculiarly adapted to the unearthing of the kind of frauds by which the office-holders have been fattening themselves and their friends.

In Republican quarters we continually hear about the influence of the "worst element of the Democratic party" being invoked to influence him for harm, and the impossibility of any man's succeeding in a good work while impeded by this pressure. The fact is that the worst element of the Democratic party is not so bad as the best element of the Republican, unless we are to decide that the latter have been so recreant to their duty to the Nation as to put into positions of the highest importance an element which is not its best. But apart from this, with this "worst element," as it is called, Gov. Tilden has had to contend in New York, and he has there accomplished the very kind of work that lies before him in Washington. He has dared to incur its bitter hostility, and in his warfare with it has enlisted in his service the honest men of the land without regard to party.

We have no doubt whatever about the election of Governor Tilden; but whether elected or not, the whole country, and each individual State, is indebted to him for the service he has already rendered by laying open to the public gaze the nature of the measures and schemes by which the people have been so shamelessly robbed and plundered, and by forcing upon the managers of the disreputable rings the conviction that great care is necessary in the transaction of their nefarious business, as eyes quick to detect, and a hand swift to punish, are following them through all the tortuous windings of their path. The nation looks to him as the avenger of its wrongs, and he will not disappoint. His past acts prove that he knows what is necessary to a reform of the abuses under which the country groans and is impoverished, and that he will boldly and fearlessly hurl his columns upon the army of evil doers, and drive them from the field. Not like Grant, will he attempt to cover and shield from punishment the thieves and robbers; and not, like him, will he share the proceeds of their dishonesty. But, as he has been doing during the past two years at Albany, he will pursue, with unrelenting severity, every peculator, to whatever party he may belong, and will thoroughly and efficiently reform every branch of the Administration of which he is the head.

The Republican party has disgraced itself before the people whose affairs they undertook to manage, and in the eye of the whole civilized world. Again and again have the people shown their willingness to overlook past faults and errors, and again and again have they been betrayed and deceived. The villainies have now assumed such alarming proportions, and the promises of amendment have been so repeatedly broken, that faith can no longer be kept alive. Yet this party comes before us again, and coolly promises us reform. This very promise is sufficient for its condemnation, for, having held the reins of government so long, there is nothing to reform but abuses which it has created. The evils which are its own creation it then proposes to correct. And how does it propose to do it? With insolence almost supreme, its leaders tell us that they will amend their ways by keeping in office the very scoundrels who have nurtured and sustained the mal-practices against whose existence the country is protesting. The platform which was adopted at Cincinnati does nothing, if it does not bind the Republicans to a continuance of the courses which have brought the country into discredit, and to the verge of ruin. The election of Governor Hayes would be the triumph of proven and convicted perjury and corruption; it would be conferring upon the leaders of the party a license to continue their immoral and profligate conduct, with full immunity from the danger of injurious consequences. The victory of the Democrats will, by placing such a man as Tilden in control of the Government, ensure the re-assumption of purity and honesty, which alone are compatible with a government based on universal suffrage.

Gov. Tilden's claim to be a Reformer is vindicated by the scalps of Tweed, Connolly, Genet and the other members of the Tweed ring hanging to his belt; by a broken and disbanded Canal ring; by an unexampled reduction of expenditures, and by a decrease of millions in the budget of the State of New York. And now let us have the evidence of the work done by Hayes for reform.—Don't let us hear all the Republican newspapers speaking at once!

New York Republicans are considerably worried over the fact that Messrs. Kehr, Goepp, Ehlinger and Sigel have left the Radical party, and have declared themselves in favor of Tilden and Hendricks. These German Reformers have followed their convictions, and care but little for the partisan malice of angry Republicans.

Democrats mean to have it plainly understood that wherever they are in power both white and black men shall have their full political rights. It is only where the Radicals rule that difficulties arise and oppressions are practised.

A CHANGE NEEDED.

The existence of two political parties is absolutely necessary to the well-being of the State; they act as checks upon each other; prevent extravagance, stimulate to nobler works, and it is a remarkable fact that the nearer equal those parties are the purer and better the Government.

No party and no set of men can have a monopoly of power for a lengthy period and not grow corrupt; frequent changes in Administration are a source of advantage to a nation, and especially accord with the spirit of our institutions.

For fifteen years, thro' the eclat of Grant's military fame, the immense influence of office-holders and the corruption fund at their disposal, taken in connection with a military despotism extending over a third of our nation, and therein preventing the free exercise of the elective franchise, the reins of government have been kept in the hands of the Republican party and they have held unlimited sway.

The result is too cruelly realized in an almost bankrupt nation, and a people groaning under the burden of an unparalleled taxation and paralyzed by the hardest of hard times and the prospect still darker for the future (if the present party keeps in power).

At no time in the history of our country has so universal and fervent a prayer for a change and a deliverance risen from the hearts of an oppressed and bleeding people. It is restricted to no section; from North and South, East and West alike, the cry for a change—a radical, thorough change, is heard.

The change so universally sought and the reform so much much needed, can never be effected through the same instrumentality by which the present deplorable state of affairs was brought about; it can only be had in placing in the Presidential chair a tried and found by experience in work of this nature, worthy to be entrusted therewith, a man of different policy and of different party.

Everything indicates this—the late elections in Kentucky and Alabama demonstrate it beyond a doubt—50,000 Democratic majority in the one, and 30,000 to 7,000 at last election in the other, attest the correctness of this view, and we feel confident that the elections in those two states is but an earnest of what will be the result throughout the whole land. 'Tis but the first roll of the "Great Tidal Wave" destined to sweep the country in November.

The work of Reform is no "political dodge" with the leader of the Democratic hosts. Mr. Tilden has been a thorough Reformer from his youth to the present time; knowing neither friend or foe in the discharge of duty. The downfall of the Tweed Ring and of that thieving Canal combination brought about through his instrumentality, was owing to that fixed and unalterable principle of his nature, which is as true as the needle to the pole; so too in the discharge of his duties as Governor of the great State of New York; upon ascertaining that the Republican Governor and the Legislature, that had preceded him, had increased the State taxes to $16,000,000 per annum, determined to reform the iniquitous tax system under which the honest toilers of that State were groaning; and in less than eighteen months from his election, the Reform Governor, true to his determination, had the taxes reduced just one-half, without interfering with public improvements or the proper administration of the laws. This is genuine Reform. Just such Reform as the tax-burdened people of the whole country desire. Just such Reform as the people of his own State appreciate as will be manifested before the Ides of November shall roll around, in tones not to be misunderstood, when they shall in the voice of 100,000 majority, instead of 50,315, say: "Well done thou good and faithful servant, go up higher."

Congress adjourned Tuesday night, after a session lasting until midnight. Scarce had the final and closing scenes of this memorial gathering been enacted when the cloven foot of the President began to show itself by his issuing an order through Secretary Cameron instructing him to hold all troops not absolutely required in the Indian country ready to be sent at a minute's notice, wherever they may be needed.—This is the first move toward more "Southern Outrages." That able independent journal the New York Herald thus comments on the subject:

The order from Secretary Cameron to General Sherman, shows that the Administration has had a very definite use to make of these troops all the time, and we at once see why Crook and Terry have been deliberately left without adequate support. It is expected that the five regiments will carry four of the Southern States, by whipping the negroes into line who have either become listless in politics or wandered off to the Democracy, and by terrifying the "fiendish" white liners into subjection. By keeping the outrage mill slowly grinding, and sending platoons of cavalry hither and thither, it is evidently hoped to revive the bitterness which has been most rapidly disappearing between the races in most parts of the South. We wish to see all citizens protected in their rights, but this turning of the army of the United States into bands of drummers for the negro vote is pushing partisanship so far that it would be grotesque if it were not infamous. This is doubtless the work to which General Sherman referred when he said the "highest authority" must answer why the troops could not be spared to fight the Sioux. The desperation of a move which dares to saddle the country with the expense of extra soldiers while keeping nearly four thousand idle for political purposes is apparent, and adds another stigma to the rule of the party in whose name and for whose aid it is unblushingly done.

The Roman Catholics have in this country about 5,000 Priests; and of their membership, which is placed at 5,000,000, 1,900,000 were born in Ireland.

The Rev. George B. Pierce, of Oneida, N. Y., has accepted the call to the vacant Pastorate of the Broad Street Baptist Church, Elizabeth, N. J.

Meetings of unemployed workingmen are being held all over the country.—The number of men out of work in the various Northern cities constitute the larger proportion of the laboring classes. Is it not time for Radical rule to end? Or must all of our industries flatten out before the people fully realize the situation?

The Rev. Lansing Burrows, recently of Bordentown, N. J., son of the Rev. Dr. Burrows, of Richmond, Va., has accepted a call to the North Baptist Church, of Newark, and will enter upon his work there in September.—That Church is to be congratulated upon securing the services of this eminently popular divine.

Ex-Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, has declared himself explicitly and unqualifiedly in favor of Tilden and Hendricks, the Democratic Reform candidates for President and Vice President of the United States; and will use his influence to secure the election of these incorruptible men.

Watterson naively says: "Whenever you go to a Democratic meeting and hear somebody on the outskirts of the crowd cry 'Hurrah for Jeff Davis,' let him have a brick between the eyes, and the next morning you will hear of a Radical bummer laid up with a broken head."

The regular Baptists have in the United States 21,551 churches, about 14,000 ministers, and a membership of 1,761,710, which, with the membership of other Baptist Societies, make a grand total of 2,335,737 in this country.

The Republicans have started the story that Gov. Tilden will spend a fortune in order to carry his own State.—If he does, it will be honest money, earned in the profession he adorns, and not money stolen from the State or National Treasury.

This is the talk of four voters out of every five you meet: "I go for a change—things cannot be worse, and may be better—a party in power so long as the present gets corrupt, and we must have a change."

The Radicals are trying to make political capital out of the fact that Gov. Hendricks is an advocate of Temperance. They are fearfully anxious to prove the dram drinkers of the country oppose him.

The Bergen (Jersey City Heights) Baptist Church, the Rev. W. W. Hammond, late pastor, have extended a call to the Rev. G. B. Vosburg, of Cooperstown, N. Y.

The Presbyterians in the United States have 5,790 ministers, with a Church membership of 535,210. Their Sunday Schools number 555,347 scholars.

The annual session of the Supreme Council Thirty-third Degree of the Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry began Tuesday last at Kane Lodge, in Broadway, New York.

Every man who denies that the Republican party should be licensed to steal itself rich and bankrupt the country, is a Southern Outrage of the largest dimensions.

"Governor Hayes only wants one term." Well, there are lots of people who are always wanting something they can't get.—Worcester Press.

The world-renowned Dr. Newman Hall says that "the Churches of Great Britain have lost 30,000 members within three years by intemperance."

A TILDEN & HENDRICK'S BANNER!

WILL BE RAISED ON NORTH AVENUE,

Near Cherry street, in this City, on TUESDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, August 22d, at 5 o'clock. Also, a

A Grand Ratification Meeting will be held the same evening at 8 o'clock, at Laing's Hall.

EMINENT SPEAKERS

will be present at both places and address the meetings.

You may buy a man's goods or hire his services, but you must earn his respect.

CHERRY STREET needs cleaning badly. Will our worthy Street Commissioner attend to the same?

THE Central R. R. Co. now connect with the new road at High Bridge for Schooley's Mountain, Chester and other places in Morris county.

THE will of the late James Leonard, of this city, has been admitted to probate by Surrogate Clark, Wm. J. Leonard and Elston Marsh, executors.

THE Board of Trade held a meeting, in their new rooms in Berry's building, corner of Front and Cherry Streets, last Monday evening, where much interesting business was transacted.

Ludlow's Centennial Minstrels are getting ready for a two weeks' travel in October through Pennsylvania. This is a club composed of good amateur talent, and will give a good entertainment.

WILLIAM HEDDEN, the newly appointed policeman, made his appearance on duty Saturday night last. Billy looks neat in his new uniform, and we have no doubt but that he will make an efficient officer.

THE passenger traffic over the new Philadelphia line, via the Central R. R. from N. Y., is daily increasing. People begin to find out that this line is the most pleasant and direct to the Centennial Grounds.

THE "Junior Bachelors of Plainfield" is the title of a club of young men formed in this city recently, who have their rooms in Hetfield's building on Cherry Street. The club is rapidly adding new names to its membership.

THE building known as a "station house" in this city, would not prove a very safe place of deposit for a desperate criminal, judging from the rumors we hear of attempted escapes of prisoners by digging under the foundation walls with pieces of iron and other implements.

WE direct the attention of the reader to the change of advertisement of D. Boehm, which appears in another column. Mr. B. is determined to sell dry goods so low that there will be no need of purchasers going out of town for their goods. He keeps on hand a good stock at fair prices and should be patronized.

ONE of those rare plants, a Night Blooming Cereus, having seven buds on it, will bloom some night next week at the conservatory of M. A. Haines, on Cherry Street, opposite this office, due notice of which will be given by a card outside the building.—The public are invited to call and witness the rare sight.

WE hear rumors of the intention of two well-known German residents to shortly open two new beer saloons with ten pin alleys attached, one on Front Street and the other on Second St., while Hyder the well-known bottler of good lager proposes to make a change of base and open a fine establishment on Cherry Street. More beer!

A REPORT is in circulation that another change has been made in the Time Table of the Central Railroad. We have made inquiries at the office of the company in New York, and are assured that no change has been made. So stick to your old time table cards printed by Force Bros., a few more of which are left for distribution at this office.

MANY of our citizens had the pleasure of listening to Rev. Dr. Goodspeed on Sunday morning last at the 1st Baptist Church. It is quite refreshing to hear such sermons occasionally; he did not act or talk much like a sick man, however, and we hope that Dr. Carman's treatment may fully succeed in restoring him again to health and usefulness, for such men are not plenty.

SOME miscreant attacked a young son and a nephew of Councilman Ryder last Monday evening, while in the discharge of their duty lighting lamps above Richmond street, and struck one of them on the head. The boys ran away toward their home in the darkness, and the name of the assaulter could not be ascertained. We hope he may be apprehended.

WE are greatly pleased to learn that the agent for the work entitled "Our First Century" has, during his short stay, taken a commendable number of orders in Plainfield. This work commands a prominent place in the library; is a permanent memorial in the family, and the purchasing of it will contribute as much as anything that can be done this year to foster an honest pride in this great Republic.

THURSDAY, August 24th, has been designated by Gov. Bedle as a Grand Reception Day for New Jersey, on the Centennial Grounds. There will be an oration delivered at 11 o'clock in the forenoon by Hon. Abraham Browning, at the Judges' Hall. Gov. Bedle will receive visitors at the State Building in the afternoon, from 1 to 5 o'clock. Every Jerseyman who can, should visit the grounds on that day.

Some thirteen members of the Young Apollo Club of Gilmore's Concert Garden, New York, enlivened the guests of the Washington Rock Mountain House on the 10th inst., with a collection of their choice songs and glees. It happened that the picnic of the Rev. Theodore S. Brown's church at Dunellen, took place at Washington Rock on the same day, and the Club were very kind in singing for the Sunday School at frequent intervals during the afternoon. They gave quite a fresh interest to the other enjoyments of the picnicers. Master Bryan possesses a fine soprano voice, and his solos were sung with fine effect.

OUR policemen and night watchmen who patrol Front Street are to be commended for their watchfulness over property during the night. Several instances might be mentioned, occurring within the past three months, where kerosene lamps left burning in stores over night have been found smoking and burning, with a prospect of explosion, by these watchful guardians. One night last week watchman Wright and officer Clark found the store of Mr. P. M. Demarest filled with smoke from some unknown cause, and while one watched the premises the other proceeded to awaken and bring to the scene Mr. P. who found that the smoke was caused by the lamps smoking. Other instances, however, might be mentioned where serious results from fire might have occurred by lamps exploding in consequence of the flame ascending high above the chimney, but for the vigilance of these guardians of the night.

Fire at Dunellen.

An old barn, in use as a carpenter shop, situated on North Avenue, just below the depot, was destroyed by fire on Sunday night last, the cause of the fire being undoubtedly from incendiaries, as the building had been discovered to be on fire once or twice before and extinguished. The loss is light. We understand the building belonged to a gentleman of Rahway.

To Correspondents.

We have received a piece of poetry entitled "Origin of the Opal," unaccompanied however by the name of the author. In this case, as in all others, where the author does not think it of consequence to send his or her name with the communication, the usual rule will be adhered to—it will lay on the table. Correspondents desiring their productions to appear in the CONSTITUTIONALIST, will send their name with the same.

The Park Question.

We are in receipt of several communications regarding the contested Park Grounds, but give publication to but one, that being an answer to a communication published last week. We think there has been enough discussion over the matter through the newspapers, and as argument grows on the question, writers are apt to become personal, thereby engendering bitter feelings, and furthermore, as the whole matter must be settled by the courts into which it has been thrown, we do not desire to have any further controversy on the subject through our columns.

Drive Wells.

In another column will be found an article relating to the recent decision regarding drive wells, which allows to the patentee, Col. Green, the collection of royalties on all wells put down by certain agents in this and other sections. It is well worth perusing by those interested. We see it stated that there has been a fund of several thousand dollars raised in Plainfield to contest the right of Mr. Green to collect the royalties imposed. This is a mistake. No such fund has been subscribed or contemplated. It is believed that the decision of Judge Benedict will yet be reversed by the higher courts. In connection with the above, we have been shown a letter from a gentleman of Saratoga, well versed in the business of sinking artesian wells, who desires to make a trial here, being perfectly satisfied that he can procure water easily by that means. All he asks is to be paid five dollars a day and his expenses to come here and prospect for four days to find out the lay of the land and the dip of the underlying rock."

P. A. C. Tournament.

In answer to inquiries from Plainfield and vicinity, the Plainfield Athletic Club wish us to say that their Annual Games will take place sometime between the first and fifteenth of Oct. Members of the Club are now in training for the N. Y. Athletic Club "Championship of America" Games, which occur on the 30th of Sept.; and it is proposed to fix a date which will necessitate no cessation in the training; therefore the P. A. C. Tournament may be expected to follow closely upon the 30th of Sept. However a public announcement will be made as soon as certain preliminaries of importance can be arranged. A large number of entries are expected, as the sports will be open to all Amateurs whether belonging to Clubs or not, and no special invitation is required. Entries will be received up to a certain date (hereafter to be announced) and upon the English plan, which causes each name sent to be accompanied by a certain sum as an entrance fee, this fee is not returnable, but retained and devoted to the procurement of prizes. The games will consist of the usual running, walking and jumping exercises, and probably one or two handicap contests will be arranged. These handicaps, should it be decided to have them, will be arranged with the greatest care; no man will be admitted without a record, and it is to be hoped that an Amateur's honor will prevent him from sending in a false one. It is generally admitted that though handicapping is sometimes disastrous to "best men," it serves wonderfully to "bring them out," or in other words to make a record for them; instance, Mr. Merritt, of the N. Y. Athletic Club, holds the Club Championship Medal for ¼ mile run, making the distance in 56 sec.; at the Amateur Handicap Meeting he beat that time by 2 sec., making it in 54 sec., probably the best time on record and still he is not happy. Athletes, who lay any claim to running, should make a record and enter, for as prizes will be given for all exercises, a poor record stands an equal chance with a good for taking one. Prizes will be of gold and silver. If accommodations can be secured the Games will be held at the Plainfield Driving Park and an admission fee charged. Contestants will be provided with tickets.

Oil Train on Fire.

The Central Railroad met with a serious loss on Saturday morning last by the burning of oil cars near Roselle. It seems that on that morning about 5:30 o'clock an eastward bound oil train on the road broke in two about a mile and a half west of Roselle, and the engineer did not discover his loss, because of the fog, till he reached Elizabeth. The brakeman on the caboose attached to the rear end of the detached cars got off about a quarter of a mile west of Roselle, when his cars stopped, and went up the track with a flag to warn an approaching freight train, but owing to the fog the engineer saw neither flagman nor cars, and ran his train at full speed into the cars standing on the track. The caboose was in an instant demolished and set on fire, and the locomotive of the freight train, No. 61, was nearly totally wrecked. The detached cars consisted of a caboose, three iron oil tanks and one wooden tank, containing about 15,000 gallons of crude oil. The collision caused the rivets of the tank next to the caboose, to separate, allowing the oil to take fire as it spread under the fire box of the locomotive, and instantly a vast conflagration occurred. Before the engine could be removed, she was fairly "burned up" as the phrase goes, the caboose burned to ashes and the three head oil cars set on fire. The wooden tank car was speedily reduced to cinders, and the iron tank cars on fire. By dint of hard labor the end car was dragged a distance toward Roselle, and the flames, which were bursting out on top, smothered by throwing dirt on the same. By this time the oil in the remaining iron car was burning the gas generated from the oil having taken fire from the top and burning fiercely, the flame, at a white heat, leaping upward a distance of fifteen feet, and emitting a sound like the roaring of a cataract. Something must be speedily done or there was danger of the tank exploding. Trains were blocked either way, but one adventuresome engineer having the hardihood to dash past the burning car, at the imminent risk of the passenger cars attached to his engine taking fire. Superintendent Ricker and Passenger Agent Baldwin were early on the spot with wrecking trains from each end of the road. The heat was intense, the rails under the cars being heated and twisted in all imaginable shapes. Finally chains were attached to the burning car, and tackling being rigged to the same a hundred men took hold of the rope and in a few moments pulled the burning car over on a side track. Then the sight was a grand one. The burning oil instantly took fire, and with a roar the flames mounted hundreds of feet in the air, accompanied with dense black smoke. The flames spread over the track, burning ties and twisting rails, until finally they were extinguished by workmen throwing shovels full of dirt on the fire. Travel was soon resumed, and in a few hours the tracks were once more in condition to run over. The loss is estimated at about $75,000.

Robberies.

Last Monday night the Grocery Store of N. P. Rogers & Son, corner of Second St. and Madison Ave., was entered by thieves and robbed of the money drawer, containing about $6, also a quantity of segars, etc. The thieves effected an entrance by springing open one of the front doors, the bolt on it evidently not being in the socket at the bottom. They then unscrewed the money drawer from its fastenings to prevent the alarm bell on same from ringing. They then took the drawer to the sidewalk and emptied it of its contents and left the drawer there. The front doors were found closed next morning but not locked.

On Tuesday night last the store of P. Muldoon, corner of Third and Liberty Sts., was broken into and the contents of the money drawer stolen, together with segars and other articles. These robberies indicate that they are not the work of systematic thieves, but of amateurs, probably a gang of young loafers who may easily be caught, and we trust that the police may effect their capture at an early hour.

Tilden & Hendricks Reform Club.

The Young Men's Tilden & Hendricks Reform Club held their weekly meeting in the new quarters of the Club, over Rockfellow's store, corner of North Avenue and Cherry Street last Monday evening. A goodly number were in attendance and a number of names proposed as new members. The membership of this fine club now number some 300 and before many days will consist of over 500. The meeting was enlivened by His Honor, Mayor Sutphen, in a stirring speech. Vice President Dr. Freidrich being called upon, addressed the meeting, and predicted that the German element would be for Tilden, Hendricks and Reform.—Other members of the club addressed the meeting, and previous to adjournment, President Jackson being called upon, made a few remarks appropriate to the occasion and the times. This club is in a most flourishing condition. Many hitherto staunch Republicans are enrolling their names under its banner, and everything in its workings is in accordance with unity and harmony, and the influence of the association will be felt in the coming election by a reduced majority of the advocates of Grant, Hayes & Co. in Plainfield. Two fine transparencies have been hung out on the Cherry Street and North Avenue sides of the building wherein the club hold their meetings, and future events will show that the Young Men's Reform Club are in earnest in their movements.

Washington Rock at Moonlight.

Bright are the nights and gay are the times now at the Washington Rock Mountain House. And they were never gayer or brighter than on Wednesday evening the 2d inst., when two large parties assembled there from Plainfield and Rahway to "dance by the light of the moon;" the former had engaged the newly erected pavilion, while the lovers of terpsichore from the latter had secured the right to the ball room; but the breeze was very strong on the platform, and the "crimps" would not remain under control, and the gaily decorated ball-room became the most attractive place, and the two parties united, and so with the harp, the piano and two violins, both companies were much better pleased than if they had remained apart. Among those from Plainfield were ex-Mayor John H. Evans and family, Mr. and Mrs. Sanford, Mr. and Mrs. Brockway, Mr. and Mrs. Russel Johnson, Mr. Mace, Mr. and Mrs. VanWinkle, Miss Baker, Miss Hyniger, Mrs. Graham and many others. Among those from Rahway, of the ladies we noticed the Misses Craig, the Misses Ross, the Misses Scudder, Miss Freeman, Miss Stitt, Miss Hill, Miss Teneyck, Mrs. Harry Hall and Mrs. Cornelius Miller, Miss Fanny Miller, besides many whose names we did not get. Of the gentlemen were always the lively and liberal Mr. Harry Hall, Mr. Miller, Mr. Craig, Mr. Squier, Mr. Ross, Mr. Atwater, Mr. Avery, Mr. Howell, Mr. Bloodgood, Mr. Sutvers, Mr. Scudder, Mr. Marsh, Mr. Hooley, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Shotwell, Mr. Toupet and others. From Brooklyn were Mrs. Leonard, Mrs. Pitt, Mrs. Callahan, Miss Callahan, Miss Bertie Pitt, Miss Minnie Tilton, Mrs. Hetfield and others. The entertainment passed off in the most satisfactory manner, and was one of the most brilliant that the Rock House has seen this summer.

Personalia.

Cashier Paree, of the 1st National Bank, and wife, accompanied by Rev. Dr. Smith and family, are spending a few days at Stroudsburg, Pa., and vicinity.

Rev. Mr. Platt will fill the pulpit of the Congregational Church, next Sunday, during the absence of Dr. Smith.

Hon. Elias R. Pope and wife, and Freeholder J. F. Hubbard and wife, are rusticating at the White Mountains.

H. O. Newman and family, and C. H. Tyler and family, are stopping at Washington Rock House.

We are pleased to learn that B. Brittin, the popular proprietor of the Scotch Plains Hotel, who has been confined to his house by sickness for a number of days, is once more around.

Mr. S. C. Peck is sojourning at Milford, Conn., where he writes he is having extraordinary luck in crabbing.

Daniel J. Runyon, executor of the late Reune Runyon, was in this city on Thursday, settling up the affairs of the estate of the above deceased. Mr. Runyon is doing a fine drug business at Babylon, L. I.

We return thanks to Messrs. Harry and Joe Ohl, for some fine crabs caught by them at Woodbridge on Monday. Crabbing is good there. Send us some more.

WE thought we had seen some large watermelons this season, but the one sent to our office on Wednesday beat them all. The melon measured 23 inches in length and was as delicious as delicious could be. We enquired who it was that so generously remembered the printer, but the young lad accompanying the melon said he was told not to tell. We are satisfied, however, that it came from our worthy friends, N. Rogers & Son, grocers, corner of 2d Street and Madison avenue. Friend Nathan, may your shadow never grow less, and "Dave" may you be elected to Congress.

FIRE MATTERS.

The alarm of fire last Thursday evening, which called out the Department, was caused by the burning of a barn at Pumptown, near Metuchen.

A disastrous fire occurred at New Brunswick last Monday morning, by which the extensive factory of the New Jersey Rubber Company was destroyed. The loss foots up about $350,000, and 300 operatives are thrown out of employment. The works will be immediately rebuilt.

PROCEEDINGS COMMON COUNCIL

FRIDAY EV'G, Aug. 11, 1876.
SPECIAL MEETING.

Council met pursuant to call of Pres.

All present except Messrs. Harris, Simpson, Tier and Brown.

Pres. Mr. Smith in chair.

On motion, the reading of the minutes of last meeting was dispensed with.

A motion was made and carried that we go into the nomination of a candidate for Councilman to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Councilman Chas. A. Hunter.

Mr. Geo. T. Young was nominated. No further nominations being made it was moved that we proceed to ballot for Councilman. Carried. Messrs. Thorn and Voorhees were appointed as tellers. Upon a ballot being taken, Mr. Young was declared duly elected, he receiving the requisite number of votes—six.

No further business appearing, Council, on motion, adjourned.

FINE JOB PRINTING at low prices.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

Friend Keller has curiosities on exhibition at his saloon on Somerset Street, in the shape of a petrified Indian skull and specimens of quartz from the Black Hills.

The Democrats will hold a Primary Meeting at Domler's Hotel, Saturday, Aug. 26th, for the purpose of selecting delegates to attend the Fourth Congressional District Convention to be held at Washington, Warren County, N. J., on Thursday, Aug. 31st, 1876.

Mr. Wm. Smith, mason, has received the contract for completing the large new warerooms for Mr. Lewis B. Boice, on Somerset Street, and will speedily prosecute the work to completion. The foundation walls are already finished. The building is to be of brick, three stories in height, 45 x 61 feet in dimensions. Each floor will constitute one single room with supporting iron pillars. No partitions will be constructed. The building is designed to be used as storerooms for grain by Mr. Boice, who is doing a large trade in that line and who proposes to increase his business.

The present rain is a blessing to Messrs. Hoxsie & Wadley, contractors for macadamizing Johnston Drive, facilitating the work of rolling down the top dressing. The firm are working night and day to complete their contract, the crusher being run until late at night.

A large bunch of brush piled up on the mountain top at Penny Orchard, property of Wallace Vail, was set on fire by that gentleman last Wednesday evening, the flames from which made a grand sight.

The new bridge at the intersection of New Grove and Somerset Streets, over Stony Brook, is progressing rapidly under the management of the contractors, Messrs. Austin & Potter. It will be a fine structure when completed.

The Public School of North Plainfield will commence its Fall session, Monday, September 4th.

Charles E. Ganse, Principal of the Public School, is taking a census of the school children in his school district.

Two stage loads of firemen from Raritan, N. J., paid a fraternal visit to the members of Warren Engine Co. No. 3, last Thursday evening and were entertained in a true firemanlike manner by the latter.

Pete Weaver's Base Ball nine played their second game of ball with the Tinner nine on Wednesday last, and defeated them by a score of 38 to 22.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Mr. Thos. S. Young has been having Forest Avenue, in front of his premises, nicely graded. Mr. Edward Johnston superintended the work.

Mr. W. H. Dean, Road Overseer, is now engaged in pushing forward the work of improving road bed of Park Avenue in this place. His plan of operations is to put down a foundation about twelve feet wide of small stones, which he covers heavily with gravel drawn from the old R. R. bed. This when completed ought to make a very good road, but there is nothing equal to macadamizing.

Persons interested in Revolutionary and Centennial matters, should not fail to pay a visit to this village and examine the famous old oaks standing in the yard of the Baptist church. There are several of these trees that are as large, if not larger, than can be found elsewhere in this part of the State, some of them measuring upwards of fifteen feet in circumference. We understand that they are very old, having stood there since before the Revolutionary war. One or two of these mammoth oaks have been struck by lightning, but they are yet live oaks, and like the celebrated ghost "will not down," but seem determined to stand with their companions as monuments to bear testimony to the thrilling scenes of their early growth, and the correctness and stability of faith of the religious society worshiping in the beautiful temple erected nearly under their spreading branches.

The Conservative voters of the 3d ward of Westfield township—Scotch Plains—will will meet this Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, in Marsh's rooms, corner of Park and Bartle avenues, for the purpose of organizing a Tilden and Hendrick's Reform Association.

The Sunday School Picnic of the M. E. Church of this place, Mr. Wm. Cooper, Supt., took place Thursday last, in Englewood Grove. The day although clear and fair, was very warm, which taken together with the intolerable clouds of dust, detracted somewhat from the pleasures of the trip. The company when ensconced beneath the ample shade of the grounds, enjoyed the occasion very much.

Mr. Warren Ackerman of this place, President of the Union Rubber Co. of N. Y., has sold out his interest in that concern.

The Annual Picnic of the Scotch Plains Baptist Sunday School, Mr. Chas. A. Smith, Superintendent, will take place on Wednesday, the 30th inst., to H. E. Acker's pleasant grove, Woodbridge Landing.

The ladies of "All Saints' Mission" of this place, will hold a Grand Bazaar at the residence of Mr. B. R. Duyckinck; on the evenings of Sept. 6th and 7th. The proceeds are to be devoted to the "Mission." Stages will run to and from the depot to the residence of the above gentleman on the evenings stated. A good time is anticipated to all attending.

Picnic and pleasure parties begin to find out that the right spot for holding picnics is at the grand old historic spot known as Feltville, where Mr. Jacob Fender, the obliging lessee of the grounds, shows all attention to guests, and charges them a reasonable sum. The grounds are admirably located for picnic parties.

A relic of the past is to be seen in the shape of a rope hanging from a large tree in the Baptist burial ground. Strangers passing through our village admire our beautiful church, standing as it does on the main road surrounded by fine old trees, and its well kept grounds always looking neat and clean, but they cannot understand why the trustees permit that unsightly rope to hang so near the road and church. Some think that Washington must have been hung a spy upon the spot, and therefore this rope is too sacred to cut down; others say it was once used for a swing in the "good old days," this may be so, but remember the old church is no more, the old school house has passed away, and why keep this rope. Let the trustees call a meeting, and then cut it down.

The Rev. Mr. Woodruff of Dunellen, will preach in the M. E. Church next Sunday morning. The Lord's Supper will be administered, also the ordinance of Baptism. Last Sunday the pastor admitted four young converts into full fellowship, showing that his labors are not in vain.

About the Park.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

In your issue of July 28, under the above caption, a few statements therein made prompt me to make this reply. The history of the purchase of the whole farm known as the "Simeon F. Randolph Farm," is distorted. The 60 or 70 acres purchased and afterwards mapped was only a portion of this farm. The farm, as a farm, was always worked to a profit. The party owning this property and represented by Mr. T. B. Stillman, never donated property for the S. D. B. Cemetery. This plot of ground was obtained by an exchange of the land near 7th Street and Union, and if any donation was ever made it belongs entirely to the generosity of Simeon Randolph, and him only. Again the writer says, "I cannot learn that any money was ever paid over to any party for the transfer of this Park since the make of said map." Such ignorance is positively without excuse. Such twaddling is disgusting. The plot was sold and money was paid for it. There could not have been any "transfer to the trustees of the Seminary," for the Seminary was under the ownership and control of one individual for several years, this time included. Such a bungle in history-writing would only come from a man of partisan passion and of decidedly superficial examination. O, would-be historian, cease from such generalities. We mistrust this same man (?) is the originator of a proposed "Modoc war." Any such writer could enter into the spirit of such a contest. We know the haunts of some of the warriors. We believe we have traced Captain Jack to his home in the lowlands. Every one knows

SITTING BULL.

For "The Constitutionalist."

MESSRS. EDITORS:

The editor of the Central Times in an interview yesterday with two prominent colored citizens, in reference to his refusal to publish the proceedings of the Hayes and Wheeler Ratification Meeting, held in this city on the 8th inst; replied: "That he did not wish to give Mr. Bagwell a big name by publishing his speech."

Now I do not propose to be selfish as the editor in question proves to be in the personal indignity he has offered to me; but will couple him with myself in showing up his little speech; showing conclusively that I have not the least objection in giving him a "big name" (along with my own of course) through the columns of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, which fortunately (on this occasion at least) has the biggest circulation of any paper in the County. In my simple ardor to obtain a "big name" for myself and the Times editor, I shall avoid the error of the man who was "A bigger man than old Grant," and content myself in the reflection that a brainless white editor deserves the pity and commiseration of his black brother, whose abilities have long since been acknowledged by the Press of the State, and who is not in need of the stupid assistance of the editor of the Times to give him a "big name."

JOHN D. BAGWELL.

Plainfield, N. J., Aug. 17th, 1876.

We are informed that on Friday morning last, while Mrs. E. B. Haines and family were absent for the day, the servants thought they would have a good time riding around the country in her pony phaeton, which ended in a grand smash up. The only wonder is that there was not more mischief done.

WHILE visiting the scene of the late oil car conflagration near Roselle, courtesies were extended to us by Mr. Frank Kiernan who keeps the neat drug store in the Mansion House building, and Mr. W. W. Dilts, proprietor of the latter named house, which is a well-kept establishment as is attested by the number of summer boarders within it.

A KEROSENE lamp suspended over the entrance to Wm. E. Johnson's Barber Shop, corner of Front and Cherry Streets, caught fire Tuesday evening last, and dropping into an area way beneath the door fortunately did no damage as it was soon extinguished.

The Driven-Well Controversy.

The following article appeared in the Springfield Republican of August 5, 1876, and clearly states the position of parties in the pending litigation in reference to the "Driven Well." Read with particular care what the claim is in Green's Patent, and then compare carefully with the theory of creating a vacuum in the earth as elucidated by Judge Benedict in his decision.

To the Editor of the Republican:

In your issue of July 21 is an article touching a litigation in the city of Brooklyn, which is calculated to give a very erroneous impression to those of your patrons who desire and have an interest in knowing the truth. You say that "Henry W. Hallett of this city is authorized to settle with all local infringers, and the Phillips manufacturing company to arrange for all future well-driving." We do not care to discuss a pending litigation in The Republican or any other newspaper, but the public have a right to know the facts on which this temporary injunction of Judge Benedict stands. Green claimed that in the fall of 1861 some soldiers acting under his order, made a hole in the ground near a creek, with a bar; the soil at this place was about 18 inches sand, and beneath it coarse gravel; when the bar was withdrawn, water rose in the hole in plain view within 18 inches of the surface; into this hole Green inserted a common liquor or beer pump, and by which no vacuum could be made in the earth;—this he swore was his only experiment. January 14, 1868, a patent was granted him for this process; his claim was the herein-described process of sinking wells, where no rock is to be penetrated, "by driving or forcing down a rod into the water under the ground, withdrawing it and inserting a tube in its place to draw the water through substantially as described."

In 1871, he re-issued his patent under this claim: "The process of driving or forcing an instrument into the ground, until it is projected into the water, without removing the earth upwards as in boring." We will not speak here of what this case disclosed, only to say that Green's testimony, as to what he actually did, showed that he invented neither, and that, if he had such conception, he was anticipated by hundreds of instances, and was only making a hole in the ground, and using the old and well-known methods of raising the water. But we desire to call the attention of the public to the whole gist of Judge Benedict's ruling on these facts: "He says that method, in the present instance, consists in accomplishing the result first conceived by the inventor to be possible, by creating a vacuum in the water-bearing stratum of the earth, and, at the same time, in the well-pit, by means of a tube projecting into the water-bearing stratum of the earth, and connected tightly with the earth, to which tube a pump is attached to the upper end." How this compound vacuum is created, neither the letters patent, nor the testimony of the case, nor Judge Benedict discloses; how a single vacuum in the earth could possibly by the pump, outside of its own suction pipe, the Supreme Court of the U. S. will answer. This order for the temporary injunction in this case was corkscrewed out of Judge Benedict upon the fallacious assumption that Green's claimed pump was the medium through which this new law of hydraulics and property of matter was brought to light and utilized. It will readily occur to the public that this whole thing is a fallacy, tested by the commonest principle of hydraulics. It will also readily occur to the legal profession that had Judge Benedict carefully considered the case of Mitchell vs. Tilghman (19 of Wallace, 288), where the patentee sought to pirate a new law or property of matter, and the court said: "That there was not the first thing in the letters patent, or the specifications to warrant the conclusion that the patentee or the commissioner of patents, at the time that the patent was granted, regarded the patentee as the discoverer or inventor of any scientific truth," and vacated his patent. Had Judge Benedict carefully considered this case, he could not have awarded this injunction. Since the publication of this injunction, we have received constant communications, showing that this patent is invalid. It is not believed that Green dare to risk a suit for royalty in the State of Massachusetts. Your article says a prominent pump manufacturer was sued for libel for pronouncing this patent a swindle (and this shows the character of the whole article). It is true that a suit was brought by Col. Green against a prominent pump manufacturer for libel, said manufacturer daring to say he believed this patent a swindle; an answer to that suit was filed, the libel was justified, and this put his patent directly in use, and the result of trial before Judge Woodruff was a judgment against Green for $500, not yet paid. The article further says Judge Benedict's opinion has not been appealed from, and this shows the tactics of the claimed owners of the patent. The facts on this point are: The case has been referred to a master, and until that master reports, no appeal can be taken. This case was argued last January, since which time the patentees have carefully avoided giving the respondent the right to appeal by failing to move the master to the hearing.

THE ELECTION LAW.

By the new law regulating elections in the State, there are many changes or new enactments, which it is well the public should have some knowledge of. The law is very lengthy, the general qualifications of voters being unchanged. [illegible]

Another section (52) requires that as soon as the election shall be finished, all ballots which have been [illegible]

This will necessitate the furnishing of two ballot boxes to each poll, as the time elapsing between the fall and spring elections is from four to five months, and the ballot box used in November will not be returned by the county clerk until the following month of May.

The section in relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors on election days is more stringent than in the old law. [illegible] election day.

WARREN'S MINERALS.—The Easton Free Press remarks: Some two or three years ago the Warren County Mica Mining Company was founded, and shortly after they had completed their arrangements as an organization, they commenced to prospect for mica in Harmony township, on the farm of Elijah Allen, with some success. From that time until the present day they have had from five to eight men working all the time, finding small quantities of the mineral for which they were searching, and now at last they have discovered a bed that promises to be a fortune. They have five men working at the present time who are getting out large quantities of the mineral, and as it is of superior quality the company experience no difficulty in disposing of it. We hope this enterprise will continue to be successful, and add still more to old Warren's riches.

Parties wanting Monuments and Headstones cannot do better than go to Manning's City Marble Works next to M. E. Church Front Street, as he has a large assortment and good marble.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

HIS DYING MESSAGE.

A single shot followed by a loud shriek, told us that one of my best men (Bradley) was hurt. He proclaimed his agony with a loud voice, turned over on his back, and commenced kicking so vigorously that the surgeon had difficulty in getting near him.

"Poor fellow!" said the doctor; "he is shot in the bladder. I am afraid it is fatal."

"O, my God!" said Bradley, "am I a dead man?"

"Keep up your spirits, my boy; and never say die," said Captain Johnson, kneeling kindly over him.

"Doctor," asked the wounded soldier feebly, "will you write to my mother that I died bravely, doing my duty, with my face to the foe, and that I thought of her when dying?"

"Yes," said the doctor, with dim eyes and a husky voice, "I will write to her, and tell her, too—"

But suddenly springing to his feet, with an indignant voice, he said:

"Why, confound it, man, you're not hurt a bit! It is only your canteen that is shot. Get up, will you?"

Bradley rose up slowly, felt himself all over, and with an exceedingly foolish countenance crawled back to his position, amid the uproarious laughter of his regiment. And for months after that, on the march, in the camp, and sometimes in the night, you might hear a voice in one direction demanding, "What shall I tell your mother?" and perhaps half-a-dozen responses would be heard, "Tell her I died with my face to the foe;" and then Bradley would search for the man who said it. He seldom found him, but when he did, there was certain to be a fight.

A MODERN GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Yesterday morning a careless mason dropped half a brick from the second story of a building out on Jefferson street on which he was at work. Leaning over the wall and glancing downward, he discovered a respectable citizen with his silk hat scrunched over his eyes and ears, rising from a recumbent posture. The mason, in tones of some apprehension, asked, "Did that brick hit any one down there?" The citizen, with great difficulty extricating himself from the glove-fitting extinguisher into which his hat had been transformed, replied, with considerable wrath, "Yes, sir, it did; it hit me." "That's right," exclaimed the mason, in tones of undisguised admiration; "noble man! I would rather have wasted a thousand bricks than have had you tell me a lie about it." This incident has a centennial moral, and a large reward is offered to any one who will discover what it is.—Burlington Hawk Eye.

MORAL POWER AND INFLUENCE.

Scattered throughout this broad and civilized land there are hundreds of thousands of churches and millions of members thereof, which alone seems an overwhelming moral power and one capable of exercising an almost impregnable moral influence. But from the sin and wickedness that is daily and hourly going on one would hardly think that there was any moral influence being exercised at all.

Every community, every church, and in fact every individual that has even a shadow of morality should wield its influence for the promotion of the most good. The lack of confidence in each other has caused the downfall of nations, kingdoms and republics. Now to bring about a restoration of perfect confidence, all should do unto others as he would like others to do unto him. If all would look upon this in its true light, and act accordingly, happiness and prosperity would smile upon every countenance and upon every land.

The carpet on which the Sultan daily prays is kept in order by several persons, whose joint salary is $2,500 a year. The Sultan's doctor and apothecaries cost $140,000 a year. Whenever any of the Sultan's wives fall ill, or rather unwell, she is at once sent away from the Sultan's palace. His third wife fell suddenly and most dangerously ill recently, and could not in common decency be removed. The Sultan constantly refused to see her during all her illness. She died during the night and the instant he heard of her death, he quitted the palace and refused to return until after her burial. When the physicians are summoned to the palace they enter the harem with the old ceremonial. First comes a eunuch, brandishing a very large sabre; then comes the doctor, followed by two other eunuchs, armed to the teeth. Muftis, or religious teachers are never admitted.

The heat is very intense. A man who carries a potato in his pocket as a sovereign preventative of rheumatism, came into town yesterday to do some trading, and when passing through the street, in the afternoon he found the vegetable had sprouted and had thrown a vine eight inches long outside his pocket. In the branches were found his jack-knife, a small box of matches, a left-handed tooth pick and part of a plug of tobacco.

* * *

A farmer near Squedunk says the bugs saved his potatoes. It was done as follows: One night his potato patch was entered by thieves and all the potatoes dug therefrom and carried off. The farmer put the potato bug on the track and followed to the edge of a woods where he found his potatoes hid under some boughs. But the thief escaped, saying "he be beggered if he ever saw the like."

* * *

A notorious thief who had spent much of his time in the "lock-up," said he didn't feel at home anywhere else. And when his time expired he would bid them all good bye, and say that he didn't expect to be gone long, for he never enjoyed himself among the rich for they handled their revolvers so careless, he had to go with a policeman for safety.

* * *

London Fun—Edith, "I say, Regy, how is it that one of our cows is brown and the other white?" Reginald—"Why, you silly, any one knows that. It's the white cow that gives the milk and the brown cow the coffee."

* * *

At the closing of a concert, while a young gentleman was struggling with his hat, cane, overcoat, opera-glass, and his young lady's fan, all of which he was trying to retain on his lap, a suspicious-looking black bottle fell on the floor with a thud. "There," he exclaimed to his companion, "I shall lose my cough medicine." That was presence of mind for you.

* * *

A good joke is going the rounds of the western part of this State at the expense of the erudite editor of one of the Michigan dailies, who, on discovering a fire, rushed out into the street shouting: "Conflagration! conflagration!! conflagration!!! Approximate hither with the implements of deluge and extinguish this combustion."—Detroit Evening News.

* * *

John Henry, reading to his wife from a newspaper: "'There is not a single woman in the House of Correction.'—There you see, don't you, what wicked creatures wives are? Every woman in that jail is married." "It is curious," said she; "but don't you think, John, dear, that some of them go there for relief?"

* * *

A thirsty toper, in a bar-room, flung down his sixpence and then filled his glass to the brim with whiskey. "Hold on!" exclaimed the bartender, in apparent astonishment, "there is a chromo goes with that drink!" and tearing off a portion of the end of a cigar box, he politely handed it across the counter.

* * *

Now that fly-time is at hand, life is fast becoming a burden to those young gents with shaven crowns. In some cases, however, the flies need to be very cautious in settling down to prevent being impaled on the hirsute, bristling, chevaux de frise.

* * *

Brignoli is mellifluously tooting in Boston. He weighs nearly three hundred pounds, and out of his adipous vastness his voice issues like the note of some sweet minstrel inclosed in a beer barrel and trying to sing through the bung hole.

* * *

A solemn procession of distinguished foreign bed-bugs, eight hundred abreast, making a column over a mile in length, marched out of Castle Garden when the late fire there began to get under full headway.

* * *

A young man who was recently married to a girl, after proposing to her sixteen times, now wishes her former lover would come around so that she would elope with him.

* * *

An Irishman having been told that the price of bread had been lowered, exclaimed: "This is the first time I ever rejoiced at the fall of my best friend."

* * *

Lady Visitor (examining the school)—"What's the capitol of Turkey?"

Bright Little Scholar—"Please'm it ain't got none—it's bankrup!"

* * *

"Another dollar and a quarter gone," said she spitefully, as she sat down hurriedly and "squashed" her brand new bustle.

* * *

A butcher recently found a shawl pin in a cow he was cutting up into steaks. It is supposed the animal had swallowed a milk-maid.

* * *

Dubbs says he is willing to lend his umbrella to any one, except when it storms, then he says he has selfish spells and wants to hide himself under it.

* * *

The button gloves are said to be yielding the palm to twenty button hose.

* * *

Every old maid can boast of two beaux; but they are elbows.

Troubles, like babies, get bigger by nursing.

NEW JERSEY
Enamel Paint Company,
RARITAN, NEW JERSEY,
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous base by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either in side or outside work or boat painting than any other Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use,
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.
Liberal Inducements to Dealers.
And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.
Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price Mist and Sample Color Card. Address, LEGAL NOTICES.

AN ORDINANCE

To open and lay out Netherwood Avenue from Front Street to Green Brook, in the City of Plainfield.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

Section 1. That a public street in the City of Plainfield, known and designated as Netherwood Avenue, the centre line of which begins at a point in the Northwesterly side of Front street, distant along said side of Front Street 71 feet in a Southwesterly direction from the division line between lands of John Taylor Johnston and George Lockwood, thence in a [illegible] course of tangent N. 46 deg. 45 min. W. [illegible] to the left with a radius of [illegible] feet for a distance of [illegible] feet to a reversing point, thence curving to the right with a radius of [illegible] feet for a distance of [illegible] feet to [illegible] reversing point, thence curving to the left with a radius of [illegible] to a point in the centre of Green Brook, [illegible]; said Netherwood Avenue to be [illegible] feet wide, be and the same is hereby laid out and opened, and that the lands and real estate with the necessary appurtenances thereto be taken and appropriated for the Avenue aforesaid, pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the City of Plainfield," and of the supplements and amendments thereto.

Providing that all expenses in opening and laying out said Avenue be paid by the property owners living along the line of said Avenue.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that an Ordinance, whereof the above is a true copy, is now pending before the Common Council of the City of Plainfield; that said Ordinance has been read twice, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and that it is the intention of the said Common Council to enact the said Ordinance. Notice is hereby further given that on Monday, [illegible], at [illegible] o'clock, p. m., the said Common Council will meet in the council chamber in said city, and then and there proceed to consider the said Ordinance; and all persons interested in the said Ordinance, or owners of property affected thereby, are notified then and there to appear before the said Common Council and show cause or reason why the said Ordinance should not be enacted and passed.

NELSON RUNYON, City Clerk.
Plainfield, N. J., August 8, 1876. 2w

Corporation Notice.

Resolved, That James Parker, George Boyd and Joseph S. Cutter, three judicious and disinterested citizens of the City of Plainfield, be and the same are hereby appointed commissioners to make an estimate and assessment of the damages that any person or persons may sustain [illegible] Cherry Street, from the [illegible] line of North Avenue [illegible] of Seventh Street [illegible] Cherry Street, between said [illegible] line of North Avenue and the [illegible] line of Seventh Street, [illegible] "An Ordinance for the widening of Cherry Street, from North avenue to Seventh Street," approved May [illegible], 1876; and the said commissioners shall also ascertain all other necessary expenses incident to the widening of said street, and shall assess the whole amount of the said damages and expenses justly and equitably among the owners and occupants of all the lands, tenements and real estate benefited by the widening of the said street in proportion, as near as may be, to the advantage each shall be by said commissioners deemed to acquire, and shall make a report in writing to this Council thereof, and generally discharge and perform all the duties required to be performed by Section 41 of the act of the Legislature of New Jersey entitled, "An Act to amend the Charter of the City of Plainfield," approved April 4, 1872.

Resolved, That Thursday, the thirty-first day of August, 1876, at [illegible] o'clock, p. m., and the Common Council chamber in said city of Plainfield, shall be the time and place for the said James Parker, Geo. Boyd and Joseph S. Cutter, commissioners appointed by the foregoing resolution to meet to take the duties of their office and all persons interested are hereby notified to be then and there present.

I do certify the foregoing to be true copies of the Resolutions passed by the Common Council on the 7th day of August, 1876.

NELSON RUNYON, City Clerk.
Plainfield, August 8, 1876. au10w2

A CHILD'S APPEAL.

BY WM. HENRY VAN DEVENTER.

When you stand beside my casket
 And gently stroke my little head,
Do not think we part forever
 Because I seem so cold and dead.

When you bend to kiss me, mother,
 Although it may seem a long good-bye,
Remember this, your child's appeal,
 Oh, meet me mother, will you try.

When beside my tomb you're standing
 And see my casket moving down,
Call not that little tomb my home,
 'Tis heaven where I'm so early found.

When you hear the church-bell moaning
 Its solemn dirge for one you love,
Think that I perhaps am hearing
 The silver bells of heaven above.

Though the grave hide me in darkness,
 And all around seems touched with night;
Trust in Him, there'll be a morning,
 When his just ways are brought to light.

Let thy prayers be ever wafted
 Up to the ear of God above,
Then the zephyrs, fresh from heaven,
 Will echo back his wondrous love.

Could you catch the slightest glimmer
 Of radiance from the Holy throne,
You soon would say, call me Mister,
 My child is there, its mother own!

Then the book of heaven He'd open,
 And mother's name be written there
By the Judge, the Great Commander;
 'Tis He who answers earnest prayer.

Let the hope of future meeting
 So light thy pathway through this world,
That I may find at our next greeting,
 My mother's name in heaven unfurled.

Aug. 20th, 1876.

ONLY A BOY.

Only a boy with his noise and fun,
The veriest mystery under the sun;
As brimful of mischief, and wit, and glee,
As ever a human frame can be,
And as hard to manage as—what? ah me!
 'Tis hard to tell,
 Yet we love him well.

Only a boy, with his fearful tread,
Who cannot be driven, must be led;
Who troubles the neighbors' dogs and cats,
And tears more clothes, and spoils more hats,
Loses more kites, and tops, and bats,
 Than would stock a store
 For a year or more.

Only a boy, with his wild, strange ways,
With his idle hours, or his busy days,
With his queer remarks and his odd replies,
Sometimes foolish, and sometimes wise,
Often brilliant for one of his size,
 As a meteor whirled
 From the planet world.

Only a boy who will be a man,
If nature goes on with her first great plan—
If intemperance, or some fatal snare,
Conspire not to rob us of this our heir,
Our blessing, our trouble, our rest, our care,
 Our torment, or joy!
 "Only a boy."

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE MISSING BRIDEGROOM.

"No, I don't like him."

John Hammersley's fist fell heavily upon the table to give emphasis to the brief sentence uttered in a loud tone.

Margaret, his niece and orphaned charge from childhood, looked up appealingly to him. Then her voice, very sweet and low, made answer:

"I love him."

"More's the pity," growled her uncle. "Why can't you love some one else?"

Just a shy smile, with a lurking of fun in it, for an answer to this question.

"Here's Bill Hall been courting you ever since you were a baby; and Mark Halstead would give his eyes for you—both smart young sailors. No, you must turn up your nose at them, and fall in love with nobody knows who."

"I thought he told you he was a junior partner in a wholesale house."

"Told me!" was the contemptuous reply; "so he did. And you love him? Now, here you've lived all your life on the sea coast, among strong men, and you set your heart on a pretty, curly-headed doll, with hands like a girl's.

"He's tall and strong, and manly, too," urged Margaret; "he does not know anything about a boat or ship, and his work does not require tarred hands and coarse clothes; but he is not effeminate, uncle."

"Humph! Will Hall is a man fit to marry a sailor's daughter; a mate of a fine vessel, and making money. It is rough to throw him overboard for a chap none of us had ever seen six months ago. I wish he had drowned before he came to Bradshaw to turn your head."

"Uncle," Margaret said very earnestly, "if Harry Craige had never come to Bradshaw, it would have made no difference in my answer to Will Hall. I would not marry him if I had never seen Harry."

A dark, evil face that had been pressed close to the closed blinds of the room in which this conversation took place, was lifted here for a moment, and a clenched fist was shaken in the air.

"Bah! If you had never seen that Harry Craige you would have married Hall when he asked you six months ago. If your fine beau was to go home again, you would forget him in six months, and marry Will like a sensible girl."

Margaret's low-spoken but sensible reply, "Never!" was lost in the snap of the garden gate, suddenly closed, and the rap on the cottage door.

The listener slunk around the corner of the house and sped away. But the visitor entered the cottage and greeted uncle and niece. A tall handsome man, with a very frank expression.

Though Uncle John growled and fumed, Margaret was the very darling of his heart, and he could never seriously oppose any wish of hers. So while the evil-faced man who had listened at the window sped over the fields, Harry Craige pressed his suit, until John Hammersley was won to give his consent to a marriage that was really a worldly advantage to his niece.

Consent once gained, Harry pleaded for a speedy wedding. So the banns were published, and the guests invited.

Mark Halstead, a second cousin of Margaret's, with a disappointed heart, consented to be groomsman, but Hall kept aloof, tho' he met Harry often and gave him a grudging civility.

The wedding day came, and the cottage was decorated for the festivities after the marriage. Margaret's wedding dress was already donned. The bride was waiting, but Harry did not come.

Mark Halstead after a whispered consultation with Mr. Hammersley, went to where Harry had boarded. Here he was informed that on the previous evening a note had been handed in for Mr. Craige, and immediately afterwards he had driven away. That was all Mark could find out that night.

The guests dispersed, Margaret refusing all companionship but that of her uncle.

When they were alone together, she crept into the strong arms that had been her protection and shelter from childhood, and lay there, white as the bridal dress she wore, shivering and fearful. And, looking at her misery, John Hammersley restrained the torrent of indignant words trembling upon his tongue, and soothed her as if she had been an infant.

"He is sick or hurt," the old man said.

In his heart he added, "and if the false villian is deceiving my girl, I will shoot him like a dog." But he had no opportunity to keep the unspoken threat.

A letter was written to the firm, and one of the partners came to Bradshaw.

It was some comfort to heart-broken Margaret, to hear of the high esteem in which Harry was held, and see the evident sorrow of the elderly gentleman who spoke so very warmly of his partner.

"It is absurd to suppose that he has run away," said his partner. "He is a man of influence in business, and his social standing is of the best, and,"—he turned to Margaret—"his love was pure, honorable and sincere. I, who have known him from a boy, know that he would scorn to play with any woman's heart."

Only a piteous cry of, "Where can he be?" burst from the girl's white lips.

"Had he any enemies here?" was the next stern question.

No one knew of any. The frank, bright nature had won friends all about him. Even Hall had been seen in friendly conversation with the missing man on the day of his disappearance.

Every inquiry resulted in the same disappointment, till the nine days wonder died out, and the mystery was unsolved.

The faithful heart that loved Harry kept his image ever closely folded to her breast, grieving silently and in solitude, and wearily resuming the routine of life. Every duty of her humble, quiet life, Margaret fulfilled with patient care: but her step was slow and weary, her face pale, and her eyes heavy with weeping. But her uncle, who loved her fondly, missed her rippling laugh and sweet song. And it was a delicate tribute he paid Margaret's sorrow that he never once hinted to her that there might be some dishonorable explanation of her lover's disappearance. This idea haunted him. Since the departure of the senior member of the firm, there was no one to speak of Harry in terms of commendation, and speculations were numerous in the village. A wife hidden secretly away, who threatened exposure, was a favorite theory. Debt was another. Escape from punishment for some crime was a third. But all these theories were kept from Margaret.

Winter set in. Hall came often to the cottage. His face was one that could mask an evil heart with an assumption of rough frankness, and seldom had any one seen it as it revealed itself when he listened at the cottage window. He had left the vessel of which he was first mate and part owner, to go upon a long cruise without him, and he employed all his time in a vigorous pursuit of his courtship. As deeply as he could love any one, he loved Margaret; and he felt sure of her favor until Harry Craige came. John Hammersley favored the sailor's suit heartily, and after Margaret had given her grief full sway for three months, she was bidden to "mope" no longer, but cheer up, as there was just as good fish in the sea as ever were caught. So, with her sorrow as deep as at first, her heart as true as steel, the girl had to be present when Hall came to the cottage, and listen to his rough wooing. Again and again she refused his presents, his compliments, or his efforts to escort her here or there. But the man would not be driven away. Encouraged by the uncle's liking, he persisted, in spite of Margaret's coolness. It was not in the girl's nature to be discourteous or unkind, and her gentle manner was accepted as a far greater encouragement than she ever intended it should be. The Winter was a long agony to her. Her uncle urged Hall's claims at every available opportunity, and the sailor himself was persistent in his attentions. And while her days were busy, her evenings were spent in uncongenial society. Margaret's nights were restless and her memory haunted. Where was her lover hidden? Where was the dark story of crime written that carried him away from her? She never doubted him, and kept his memory bright in her heart. She did not hope to ever meet him on earth again, for she was sure that if he lived he would return to her, but no other love should ever obliterate his from her heart.

A whole year wore away, and Hall urged his suit vehemently in the preceding days, and Margaret realized, with a sad heart, that her steady refusal of his suit was alienating her uncle's affections. He could not understand this constancy. Why should Margaret live alone because one man was unfortunate or false? So he urged, as they sat in the parlor of the little cottage, and Margaret listened with drooping head and hands folded wearily.

"I cannot marry, uncle," she said, gently but firmly; "I cannot forget the only man I ever loved."

The garden gate clanged, a step crunched the gravel, and, without knocking, a man in a rough sailor's dress, bearded and bronzed, stood in the doorway. One look, and with a cry, Margaret sped to the open arms of Harry Craige.

John Hammersley only stared, till a cheery voice said:

"You see I am a sailor—a man after your own heart."

"Bless thy eyes! where did you come from?"

"Off the Sea Gull."

"Whaling?"

"Yes."

"But what possessed you to go off in that way?"

"I will tell you. Sit here beside me Margaret. I was shanghaied. Do you know what that means my pearl? Your uncle does. I was drugged, carried aboard the Sea Gull, and recovered my senses when we were out of sight of land, bound for a year's whaling cruise."

"But, who—" began John Hammersley.

"William Hall," was the stern answer. "He told me Margaret, a week before our wedding day, a friend of his, a captain of an East Indian vessel, who had some curiosities that would please you, and rare shawls and fabrics to show me also. I never thought of treachery, and when he sent me a note to meet his friend in the village, I drove over. Half way on my trip I met Hall and took him up. We drove to a small tavern, and while we waited I drank a glass of wine with Hall. A numbness soon seized me, my head grew dizzy, and I knew no more until I awoke on board a whaling vessel in the dress of a common sailor."

"The scoundrel!" muttered John Hammersley.

"I raised a pretty fuss at first," Harry continued, "but it was useless. Nobody believed I could pay the sum I offered if they would carry me to Bradshaw, and I concluded I must make the best of the situation. So, Mr. Hammersley, I applied my energies to seamanship, and they tell me aboard the Sea Gull that I make a very tidy sailor."

"You are a brave lad," was the warm response, "and I'm heartily glad you're back; and I'm heartily glad of another thing—and that is, Margaret's true love has baffled Hall's little game. Old as I am, he had better keep out of reach of my arm."

Apparently the baffled schemer thought so himself, for he was never more seen in Bradshaw. Two there were who little cared. The two were married a few weeks later, and Uncle John threatened to find a wife himself; but at the last accounts he had failed to do so, preferring to wait till Margaret's eldest daughter is old enough to take her mother's place as housekeeper in the cottage.

SUDDEN CURE—JOHN RANDOLPH'S REMEDY FOR LAZINESS.

It is well known that Mr. Randolph owned more than three hundred slaves, and was exceedingly lenient toward them; he would not allow his overseers to treat them with any degree of harshness; they were eye servants, and would only work when closely watched, or when Mr. Randolph was at home from their love for him and fear of his anger.

Once when his public duties kept him from home most of the time for several years, his negroes became idle and worthless, and not half crops were raised; the carts and wagons, and all the farming utensils were left in the fields, and without shelter were ruined; the fences were down or dilapidated, and the cattle and stock of every kind were much crippled up by the negroes in their efforts to chase them out of the fields. More than half of the negroes were "playing possum;" that is, pretending to be sick, in order to avoid work.

While things were in this condition Mr. Randolph came home from Washington to spend the Christmas holidays. Looking over his plantation accounts with his overseer, discovered that his plantation was only not self-supporting, but actually bringing him into debt. After a thorough examination of everything on the plantation, he saw at once what was the matter, and that his rigid instructions to be lenient to the negroes had been the cause of the trouble and that they would not work unless under fear of punishment, and he determined upon a plan for correction.

The slaves in Old Virginia, and all the South, had always a week's holiday from Christmas to New Years, and these days were days of general jubilee and jollification. Eggnog was kept at the big house or mansion for everybody and all hands; there was a terrible slaughter among the negroes' pet pigs and fat poultry, and many possum caught weeks before and fattened in boxes and barrels and "coons" smoked in the big cabin chimney, were served up with pound cake, pudding, chicken pie, "store tea," and locust and persimmon beer, at the holiday feasts night and day. It was then that the fiddle, the banjo, the tambourine and the clevis and clevis pin kept up perpetual music for the never ceasing dance.

Mr. Randolph waited for the termination of these Christmas holidays, and promptly on the first day of January he ordered his overseer to have all the farming utensils brought to the barnyard. It took all day to search for them and get them together from where they had been left lying about in the fields, far and near. The next morning there was a grand inspection of all the plows, harrows, hoes and rakes, and all that were broken or seriously injured were thrown into a pile. Mr. Randolph then said in his shrill voice:

"Set them on fire, Mr. Chumley, and burn them up." The overseer remonstrated and urged that many of them might be repaired."

"No sir! No sir! I want them burned up, they would always be old, rickety and good for nothing; I want no good for nothing articles on this place."

And burned they were. Orders were then given to have all the wagons, carts, slides, lizzards, scythes, cradles, harness and gear brought up, and after due inspection, the next morning a large bonfire was made of all those rejected, and immediate orders issued to have all the sheep, goats and hogs gathered together. On the ensuing morning these were inspected and many were found feeble with age and want of food, others were crippled and injured and all such, in spite of the overseer's pleadings, were remorselessly knocked on the head and buried.

All the horses, mules and horned stock were brought up for the fourth day, and under Mr. Randolph's rigid inspection, many were declared worthless, and, although Mr. Chumley begged that some of them might be spared, as they could be fattened and put to good use, Mr. Randolph was unrelenting, and all the condemned, including the blind, lame, spavined, fistulated, and wind broken, were mercilessly shot and buried.

As the weather had been quite cold during these days of inspection, many of the negroes, and especially the old, had continued to "play possum," and had never turned out of their cabins to aid in getting together the live stock or farming utensils. Mr. Randolph now gave orders that all the negroes, old and young, should be brought to the house next day for inspection, and in the meantime he had a good many plain coffins of all sizes made, and suitable graves dug near the chapel.

The news of these fearful preparations soon penetrated every cabin in the negro quarter, and these things began to look serious in the mind of Mr. Cuffee Black. The negroes knew that Mr. Randolph was a member of Congress, and a big man in the country; they knew he was accustomed to have his way, and that nobody attempted to interfere with him, and they fully believed that he had full power of life and death over them. They knew he was a good, kind master and neighbor, but then they said he had "such quare ways" there was no telling what he would do if the notion took him. They had seen how he had burned up all the damaged farm implements; had caused all the injured and worthless sheep, goats and horses to be knocked in the head, and he had shot all the old, broken down stock without any pity, and now what did he mean to do with them, and with all those coffins and graves. This was exactly the train of reflection and comment that Mr. Randolph had calculated upon, and accordingly, on his arrival on the ground, he found an anxious, terrified crowd of negroes, and not one missing—all were there. He entered and took his seat beside the overseer at a table. Juba, his servant, placed on the table before him, his dueling case, open, and containing a pair of pistols and plenty of ammunition.

"Are they all here?" asked Mr. Randolph of the overseer.

Up spoke a hundred voices:

"Oh, yes, Marst John, we's all here."

Chumley was ordered to call the list containing the names of all those who had been old enough to work during the year, but had not worked. They were placed in a row in which soon stood more than half of all the grown negroes.

The old shirks and sinners were not slow to see how the list had been made up, and long before the roll was ended many of the negroes were on their knees beseechingly looking from the stern face of their master toward the pistols and the open graves; and many a "Lord a mercy on me, Marst John," went up from the line, but Randolph ordered them to be silent.

When the last had been called he squeaked out: "You say, Chumley, these niggers won't work; that they are old, worthless and good for nothing; that they cannot make enough to eat; and I must buy bread and meat to feed them.

Handing Chumley a pair of pistols, he said:

"Chumley, begin at the other end of the line, and I'll begin at this, and we will shoot these worthless negroes."

A universal shriek went up, and all the negroes rushed up to Randolph and begged, in the most pitiful tones, for their lives, all declaring that they would work and that they never would play possum and lie up again.

Randolph finally relented and agreed to spare them, provided they could give security among the other negroes that they would work well in the future. No one could have effected such a genuine scare as Randolph did. The negroes knew that he was a strange and eccentric man: that the white people of Charlotte all but worshipped him, and they believed implicitly that he would do all that he said he would do. He did not allow any severe punishment upon his slaves, but this lesson was sufficient. The empty graves were filled up without occupants, and the negroes went to work with a will.

HANGED WITHOUT WARRANT.

In the olden time in Plumas county, a man was arrested for murder, tried and convicted and sentenced to be hanged. The case was taken to the Supreme Court on appeal. Finally a decision was filed affirming the judgment of the court below, and directing that the defendant be resentenced to death.

In those days the Sacramento Union was about the only paper circulating in that remote county, and whatever appeared in its columns was taken as being undoubtedly the fact. The number containing the Supreme Court decision arrived at the county seat, and the sheriff saw it, and concluded that the matter was settled finally. So walking into the jail he addressed the defendant with "Well, the Supreme Court has affirmed the judgment in your case; it's printed in the Sacramento Union."

"Is it?" said the prisoner; "that's rough, but I guess I'll have to stand it."

"Well," said the Sheriff, "I have got to hang you; you have been in here a good while, an expense to the county, and the sooner the thing is over the better."

"There is no use being in a hurry," said the prisoner; "give a fellow some chance to get ready."

"How will the first of next week suit you?" asked the Sheriff.

"Oh, what's the use of all that hurry; call it the last of the week."

"Well, we will split the difference and call it Wednesday afternoon," said the officer.

This was acquiesced in by the party in interest, and at the appointed time he was taken out and hanged.

At the opening of the District Court at the following term, Judge R. H. Tayloy, now of Virginia City, who was then on the bench, inquired of the clerk if the remittier had been sent down, and being advised in the affirmative, said, "I guess we had better have the prisoner brought up this morning and resentenced."

He was rather surprised when the Sheriff innocently informed him that the law had already been fully satisfied, and that the criminal had been sent before a court whence there could be no appeal.

POPULATION OF THE WORLD.

According to Ravenscroft's tables, it appears that the estimated population of the world is 1,263,574,860.

of this number.
Asia has	372,456,300
Africa	51,875,000
America	60,556,000
Oceanica	3,990,000
Europe	274,697,660

Respecting the religious state of this vast multitude, the following analysis will speak for itself:

Asia:
Heathen	788,256,200
Mohammedans	76,000,000
Jews	1,500,000
Christians	6,700,000
Africa:
Heathen	22,524,000
Mohammedans	25,000,000
Jews	1,250,000
Christians	3,101,000
America:
Heathen	3,000,000
Jews	30,000
Christians	57,514,000
Oceanica:
Heathen	2,985,000
Jews	5,000
Christians	1,000,000
Europe:
Heathen	150,000
Mohammedans	4,688,000
Jews	3,431,700
Christians	266,427,960

Making a summary of these numbers, we have:

Heathen	816,915,500
Mohammedans	208,688,000
Jews	5,216,700
Christians	334,754,000

It is difficult to tell the number of languages spoken by these vast numbers of our race. The lowest estimate is three hundred. Some place the number at a much larger figure. The Bible, or a portion of it, is translated into about two hundred and fifty tongues or dialects.—Foreign Miscellany.

According to a Cologne newspaper, there is in that city a booth in which is exhibited a "bearded lady." At the entrance is stationed a girl to take money. Recently a visitor having feasted his eyes on the strange phenomenon, thinking on his departure to have a joke with the little money taker, said to her, fondling her under the chin the while, "Well, little one, I suppose the bearded woman is your mamma, eh?" "No, sir," replied the child, "she is my papa."

TILDEN, HENDRICKS AND REFORM.

The Democratic voters of the City and Township of Plainfield, and all others who favor the election of Tilden and Hendricks, as President and Vice President of the United States, are hereby requested to meet in the room of the Young Men's Tilden and Hendricks Reform Club, corner of North Avenue and Cherry Streets, on Wednesday, Aug. 30, 1876, at 7:30, P. M., to organize for the coming campaign.

A prompt and full attendance is desired.

JAMES PARKER,
Ch'n. Dem. Ass'n.

ATTENTION! VOTERS!

Our Republican friends may sneer at retrenchment as much as they please, but it is the only door-way to public and private prosperity. It, together with official honesty and a gold based currency, comprise the sure remedy for the evil times now afflicting the fair land in which we live.

Retrenchment is wealth and security.

Extravagance poverty and ruin.

They apply nationally precisely as they do individually.

Retrenchment is the practical aim of the Democratic party. We prove what we assert by recorded figures.

For the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1877, the Grant Administration asked the present Congress to appropriate for Fortifications, Civil Expenses, and the Army and Navy, only a portion of the public service, mind you, the enormous sum of $90,186,883!

Scan those figures, they are a terrible pile, over ninety million dollars!

The Democratic House of Representatives cut the shameful estimate down to $50,785,000.

The Republic Senate fought Democratic economy step by step, and endeavored to swell the appropriations many millions.

Finally, through the firm integrity of the House, the aggregate amount appropriated was $55,400,427, and more than sufficient to meet all the necessary wants of a Government honestly administered.

There is an unanswerable argument in those figures. It cannot be rubbed out.

They evidence the important fact, that in a single fiscal year, the Democratic majority in the House of Congress saved the people of the United States $34,786,456!

Nearly thirty-five million dollars!

Think of that Voters!

SOUND REASONS.

The Liberal Republicans of Chicago, among whom are many German citizens heretofore voting with the Republican party, have, in a public address, given the following as their reasons for supporting Governor Tilden for the Presidency:

"Because he is the man to combat the evils of the hour.

His name alone is a watchword of reform.

He is nor fettered and bound, hand and foot, by pledges to corrupt politicians.

He is not supported by rings and associations, by political knights of the road who bring their shining lances to bear upon the pockets of the people.

Because his nomination is the result of the spontaneous and irrepressible will of the people to place an honest, energetic and able man at the head of the nation.

He has already proven that he possesses the requisite courage and ability to insist upon an honest administration of public affairs and to unmask political thieves and scoundrels.

His capacity and zeal for reform have long enjoyed a national reputation.

He does not stand in need of the recommendation of personal friends that he is equal to the task.

He will give us honest money, as he will give us an honest administration.

No fraud will escape him, corruption will in vain seek to thrive where he commands.

Through his election we may well expect to see re-established the original purity of our institutions."

These are reasons well stated, and they do not in the least magnify the superior claims of Samuel J. Tilden for the responsible postion of President of the United States.

VOTE FOR TILDEN AND HENDRICKS!

GRANTISM.

By an act of Congress passed some years ago it was expressly declared, that workmen should be employed in the several Navy Yards with reference to skill and efficiency, and without regard to other considerations.

That is now, and has been for several years the positive mandate of law. Its intention being to prevent the running of political machines at the public expense.

It was a wise enactment, a solemn edict of the law making power, and yet, it has been notoriously violated by the present Republican Administration.

The following letter proves the assertion:

> BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 28, 1874.
>
> MY DEAR COMMODORE.—I wish you would approve the requisitions for men to be employed as they may be needed until the 1st of November. Some fifty additional men have been allowed for the Chelsea district and I suppose some more will be required from Gooch's district. The Administration desire the success of Gooch and Frost.
>
> Yours respectfully,
> I. HANSCOM.
>
> Commodore E. T. Nichols, U. S. N., Commandant.

Hanscom was the Grant-Robeson Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs. "The Administration," Hanscom informed the Commodore at Boston, desire the success of Gooch and Frost," and therefore a large additional force of men must be employed until November.

What were those men engaged for?

To electioneer and vote for Gooch and Frost.

Who were Gooch and Frost?

Republican candidates for Congress.

From whence came the money to pay those pretended workmen?

From the Treasury of the United States—out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

By virtue of what legal authority?

None, but on the contrary, in open violation of a law of Congress.

Was there ever a more outrageous contempt of legal restraint, and yet, the foregoing discloses only a single case, the same vicious system being no doubt carried on at all the Government Yards during the past few years.

And, judging from the following item which appeared in a New York journal of last week, the corrupt political practice still continues:—

"Several hundred men will be put to work in the Brooklyn Navy Yard the first of next month. There are several vessels now waiting repairs."

From September 1st to Election day is about two months. How singular that those vessels should not have received earlier needed repairs!

Never before in the entire history of our country did the public welfare call louder for a change of administration, and the complete ousting of a ruling party, than at the present time.

We have no controversy with individuals as citizens, and abhor personal slander, but against official misconduct our hostility is determined and duty compels us to wage it.

Grantism is a withering blight upon the land, and the election of Mr. Hayes would be its perpetuation four years longer.

Let us have a change!

If the people of the country continue to accept the leadership of the Republicans, they must maintain their beggary. Tolerate Republicanism, they maintain their bankruptcy; tolerate Republicanism, and they will sooner or later shake hands with famine. The Republican party have too long held the power in which the resources, the energies and the institutions of the people are absorbed. Tolerate Republicanism, as its leaders would deal it out, its smiles and compliments, its liberal appointments, and you tolerate the policy through which Republican Statesmen have managed, ruled and robbed the country.

Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts, stands independent of all political parties. Statesman bred, intelligent and patriotic, he impartially views things as they really are, and yearns only for the honor and prosperity of his country. He supports for President Samuel J. Tilden.

To appoint a day for the resumption of specie payments, without providing a gold reserve for the specific purpose, is very much like erecting poles for a house and laying on the roof before building the foundation.

POLITICAL SLANDERS.

It is a sad feature of political contests in this country, that among the weapons employed, those of slander and abuse occupy the most prominent places. It does not matter how high the private character of the candidate has stood, the moment his name is presented for public support, the very flood-gates of vituperation are opened upon him and he becomes the target against which are launched all that party spleen and political hate can learn or invent; whether true or false, it is a matter of no consequence, so long as they who use them can accomplish their purpose.

It is not men of indifferent character only, that indulge in this practice; but the better class of our Editors, men who claim to be, and are, gentlemen, seem on such occasions, under the influence of a mania, and cast away all the restraints of decency, all respect for reputation and join in the hue and cry, a spectacle at once astonishing to the world and disgraceful to themselves.

But while we condemn this iniquitous practice, let us not be understood as denying to the Press the right to criticise the character of candidates or of holding up to public reprobation the names of unworthy or disreputable men who present themselves for the suffrages of the people. The history of the last few years, in connection with our public men, is a sad one, and warns us that we cannot subject the character of applicants for office to too severe a scrutiny. Our country's future, with all that is envolved in it, impresses on us our duty in this direction. But let it be done as we would perform any other important act; carefully, calmly and conscientiously, remembering that reputation is priceless and should not be assailed, except by the demands of solemn duty.

We trust that the era of "mud-throwing" as it has not inaptly been termed, has had its day, and that we, in common with all respectable and right thinking men, may soon be enabled to congratulate ourselves that it has passed away forever.

DEATH OF SPEAKER KERR.

The Hon. Michael C. Kerr, of Indiana, Speaker of the National House of Representatives, died at Rockbridge, Alum Springs, Virginia, Saturday evening last, after a long and painful illness.

Mr. Kerr was born in Western Pennsylvania, March 15th, 1827, and early in life removed to Kentucky, where he was admitted to the Louisville bar in 1851. He shortly afterward changed his residence to New Albany, Indiana, and continued a citizen of that place during the remainder of his days. He was elected a Democratic Congressman in 1864, 1866, 1868, 1870 and 1874, and last December the honor of the Speakership was worthily bestowed upon him. Candor and conscientious devotion to duty were the prominent characteristics of Mr. Kerr, and his death will be generally regretted as a public loss.

VOTE FOR TILDEN.

Amid the slanderous political journals of the present day the New York Times stands foremost. Its villainous abuse of Mr. Tilden is disgusting to any man who prefers truth and decency to partisan infamy. No appellation is too vile, no falsehood too glaring for that organ of Grant-Hayesism to utter against the Democratic candidate for President. By its account he is the very concentration of all that is bad.

Hear what that same Times said about the same Mr. Tilden five years ago. Mark the following extract from its columns of November 6th, 1871:

"Vote for Samuel J. Tilden. The voters of the Eighteenth Assembly District ought to esteem it an honor and a privilege to elect Samuel J. Tilden to the Legislature. He has shown himself a gallant, conscientious, efficient foe to corruption. We appeal to every Republican to work and vote for him, and to do so the more cheerfully—as we make this appeal—because he is an honest Democrat."

Samuel J. Tilden is the same honest and able man now that he was then.

He has not changed.

He to-day stands the fearless foe to corruption that he did then.

As President of the United States he will scatter the cohorts of rascality.

The Times knows it and trembles at the prospect.

That's what's the matter.

VOTE FOR SAMUEL J. TILDEN.

It is out of sympathy for the oppressed and wronged that many to day are taking an active part in politics, giving time and means, under the conviction that now of all other times their services are required to bring back the days when the poor man can again get work, and thereby means to keep his family in decent comfort.

So it begins to look as if our future public men and servants are going to be of the just, chivalrous kind that marked the days of Calhoun and Webster, Choate and Clay; when in the war of politics there was keen enmity, but assuredly less falsehood, less corruption and less cant.

As each day's intelligence comes in we are more deeply impressed that the country is determinedly preparing to throw off the abominable misrule it has for so many years been sweating under. It is shaking like the body of a powerful man struggling to cast out that which sickens him and threatens worse.

Outside of our professional and trades-people there are two powerful classes, which really form the bulwark of the present crusade against corruption and misrule. The working population, patient, generous and heroic; the mechanic population, intelligent upright and forbearing. They are the nerve and marrow of our towns the bone and sinew of our land.

Democrats should be prompt in perfecting their local organizations. We are to have a lively time this autumn, and the sooner the party is prepared for active duty the easier will it be to achieve the victory it is to win.

The Indianapolis Journal, speaking of Tilden's letter, says: "We don't want any more of that kind." Of course not!

Mr. Tilden, the acknowledged father and leader of Reform and whom our party has wisely selected candidate for President, disavows that the great movement of the people for a reformation is one of a special party. It is one of the nation embracing all parties and classes.

The war ended twelve years ago, and had practical sense swayed the finances, and honesty and economy controlled the public expenditures, specie payments might long since have been resumed, and instead of business ruin and depression now existing, solid prosperity become the lot of the American people.

Prof. D. W. Atherton, of Rutger's College, was nominated by the Republicans at New Brunswick on Wednesday last, as candidate for Congress from the Third District. Miles Ross, the present Democratic representative, will, however be returned to Washington in the capacity of Congressman.

A writer in the Central Times bemoans the course pursued at the recent Republican Primary meeting to select delegates to attend the Convention to choose a candidate for the House of Representatives and concludes as follows:

> In sorrow it must be said that we are unworthy of a Republic. Let us in shame take down our centennial bunting and banners and poles, cast into the brooks our pictures and statues of Washington and the fathers, and acknowledge that our form of government, while in theory the noblest, is by our practice the worst upon the civilized globe.

Truth is mighty and will prevail.

Ex-Gov. E. D. Morgan was nominated for Governor of the State of New York by the Republicans last Wednesday at Saratoga.

One would judge after reading the last issue of the Central Times that the Republicans of Plainfield are not in perfect accord, especially on the subject of selecting delegates to attend Conventions.

That was a good point made by the Hon. Wm. B. Maxson in his eloquent address at the grand ratification meeting, Tuesday night; "Gentlemen," said he, "Some of the Republicans tell us if we elect Tilden we'll have hard money, and some of the Republicans tell us if we elect Tilden we'll have soft money; but, gentlemen, if you elect Hayes and thus keep the present corrupt office in power, you won't have any money at all."

POLITICAL CLIPPINGS.

Only a little more than eleven weeks to the Presidential election. Brace up!

The welkin begins to ring. "Tilden and Reform!" is the music that's in the air.

It looks as though Grant would have to send some of those troops up into Vermont.

John Y. Foster, of Newark, is going to stump Maine. That will undoubtedly give the State to Tilden.

"This we will say—Mr. Tilden is a gentleman, an able man—and a man of very high character."—N. Y. Times in 1874.

As the letter H follows G in the alphabet, so would Hayesism succeed to and carry onward the gross evils of Grantism.

Hickory poles, flying the flag of Tilden and Reform, are going up all over the country. The scenes of 1840 and 1844 are being re-enacted.

Governor Hendricks, it is stated, does not intend to remain silent during the canvass. After a short rest at his home he will begin work and then—listen for thunder.

The highest testimonials as to the purity, ability and efficiency of the deceased Speaker, abound in all the papers. Every honest journalist has a tribute of respect for Mr. Kerr.

The Democrats in Congress have kept steadily in view the country's necessity, and the result they have to show at the end of the session is such as the people will declare that they need not be ashamed of.

It is impossible to shame a Radical. Notwithstanding the charges proven against Colfax and Orth, they are billed to stump Indiana for "the ticket," and no protest comes from the lips of "honest Hayes."

A meeting of some hundred colored men was recently held on a platform near Killian, S. C., at which the following characteristic but terse resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That we are in favor of peace with the white people, and opposed to all riots, and especially to carpet-baggers."

Tilden's plan: Reduction of salaries and abolition of needless offices; removal of thieves out of the offices and into the penitentiaries; reduction of naval expenses; reduction of army expenses; retrenchment and reform in every department of government, revival of confidence and business in general, prosperity throughout the land.

We hear from every part of New York State the most encouraging news concerning the strength of Governor Tilden with all classes of citizens and men of all parties. The demand for reform, for the weeding out of Grantism from the government, and for a higher tone in politics, is general, and the people understand full well that to secure these ends the only way is to elect Tilden; that with Hayes we should gain nothing, and make no reform headway. Tilden gains steadily the more maturely people think on the needs of the time. He will roll up a rousing majority in New York.—Sun.

Fighting Joe Hooker, in addressing Mr. Tilden, says "The whole government of the nation has been corrupt, desperately corrupt, and the honor and glory of applying the antidote I am convinced will belong to you. If the fact of your nomination does not enhance the material values of the nation, I am sure your election will do it. Already I seem to breathe a new atmosphere, as is the case with every well-wisher of his country." This old soldier is as fearless in his utterances on the political situation, as he has proved himself to be when at the head of his invincible legions on the battle field.

It is worthy of notice that all the "outrages" upon negroes at the South, are in the Republican States, where the governors, judges, prosecuting attorneys, and the rest of the office-holders are Republicans. In the Democratic States there is good order and good government, and negroes and white people are alike protected.—Hartford Times, Aug. 8.

Charles Sumner, in his eloquent letter to the colored citizens of Washington, July 29, 1872, said: "With no common sympathy I have observed that Mr. Hendricks, a leading Democrat, whom I knew and esteemed in the Senate, has recently announced his acceptance of the constitutional amendments with their logical results. He proposes, as a proper key-note to the extraordinary movement now swelling, to a sure triumph, "just laws and public virtue."

The Nashville American furnishes some "probabilities" that did not come from Washington, but are none the less true on that account: "For Tennessee and the Southern States, rising temperature for Tilden and reform. For Indiana and Ohio, and lower lake region, threatening bread riot storms and decreasing temperature for Hayes. In New York a tornado for Tilden, followed by a reform tidal-wave along the Pacific coast."

The Democrats have done more good for the nation in the session of Congress just now closed, than has been accomplished by the Republicans during the whole period of Grant's administration. If so much has been done, in so short a time, and with such drawbacks, what may not be expected when Gov. Tilden is in the presidential chair, and both branches of the Legislature are in the hands of the Democratic party.

The prominent Republicans some years ago were Greeley, Sumner, Stevens, Giddings, Banks, Curtin, Trumbull, Farnsworth and McClure. All these (among the living) are for Tilden and Hendricks, leaving the old party organization in charge of such leaders as Boss Cameron, Grant, Babcock, Shepherd, Kemble, Mackey, Joyce, McDonald, and others of the same stamp in and out of the penitentiary.

The Radicals are ridiculing the Democratic Investigating Committee, and denouncing their work as fruitless extravagance. Mr. Hale (Mr. Blaine's Hale) said they had cost almost a million of dollars, and in the next sentence admitted a retrenchment of about THIRTY MILLIONS in the appropriations for the year. Even were Mr. Hale's wide exaggeration correct, one million would be well spent in making a permanent annual saving of THIRTY MILLIONS, and there is only the Radical Senate to thank that the retrenchment did not reach the enormous figure of $65,000,000. Investigation necessarily preceded retrenchment, just as a physician's diagonis of a case is a necessary preliminary to his treatment of it. To apply retrenchment judiciously, the extragance had to be first discovered and exposed by the Investigating Committee.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.

You are asked every day through the columns of your newspapers and by your druggist to use something for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint that you know nothing about, you get discouraged spending money with but little success. Now to give you satisfactory proof that "Green's August Flower" will cure you of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint with all its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Habitual Costiveness, Palpitation of the Heart, Heart-burn, Water brash, coming up of food after eating, low spirits, &c., we ask you to go to your druggist, Wm. H. Voorhees, and get a sample bottle of "Green's August Flower," for 10 cents and try it, or a regular size for 75 cents, two doses will relieve you.

DEMAREST, the Grocer, is out with another new and handsome wagon built by Homan, of Somerset Street. This popular grocer is doing a handsome trade, all on account of his low prices and good goods. Read his advertisement in another column.

A NEW bell of fine tone has been put in the belfry of the Seventh Day Baptist Church, in place of the cracked one which for some weeks past has given out such a horrid sound. The new bell is from the manufactory of Meneley, Kimberly & Co., Troy, N. Y.

A correspondent wants to know the best way to preserve peaches. Around here one way is to climb the tree with a shot gun at dark and stay there till morning. Another way is to carry the tree into the house every night at sunset. The only sure way, however, is to eat the peaches before they are ripe.

THE new real estate and exchange building now in course of erection next to the depot for the firm of Rowe & Harney, will be an ornament to the city when completed. It is to be constructed of pressed brick on three sides, and three stories in height, and 19x40 feet in dimensions. Isaac Pangborn is doing the mason work while Thorp & Voorhees will do the carpenter work.

MRS. BROKAW slipped and fell, overturning a pail of lime on a red hot stove; it rebounded into her eyes, and what agony she endured for five weeks can be imagined.—Her sight was given up as lost forever by New York and Newark eye infirmaries, but she is now rapidly recovering from pain and blindness under Dr. Carman's treatment. People now think he can beat them all on sore eyes.

AMONG the vast crowd at Laing's Hall to listen to the eminent speakers of Tuesday evening we noticed our staunch old Democratic friend Aaron Allen, of North Plainfield, wearing an immense white hat which he is proud to speak of as the hat his father wore when he went to the polls to vote for Gen. Jackson on his second term. Aaron proposes to wear that hat to the polls when he votes for Tilden and Hendricks this fall.

A LADY stepped into Demarest's grocery store this morning to make a purchase, leaving an infant child in a baby carriage outside. As she stepped inside the carriage commenced rolling toward the gutter and the wheels striking the curb the vehicle was overturned and the infant tumbled out on the walk. Mr. Demarest ran out and picked the child up, which happily was not injured, and placed it again in its carriage.

AN almost fatal accident happened at the depot this morning on the arrival of the 8:24 Philadelphia train. The platform was crowded with passengers, and one person, Charles Brittin, a coachman in the employ of Mr. D. O. Wotherspoon, stood on the extreme edge of the platform. The engineer of the incoming train perceiving that the man must be struck by the locomotive if he did not step back, blew his whistle sharply, which so frightened the man that in attempting to turn around, he was struck by the cross-beam on the head of the locomotive and hurled headlong into the crowd, knocking down four ladies in his fall. For a time there was a scene of confusion, but the ladies finally scrambled to their feet and Brittin, who was injured somewhat in the back, was sent to his home.

TUESDAY morning last a number of tramps set upon a companion named Shannon in the rear of the First Baptist Church and gave him a sound beating because he would not give them some money in his possession. Shannon afterward staggered up Front Street, until he arrived at the corner of Front and Cherry Streets, where he fell to the pavement in front of Berry & Thorn's store. He was picked up and conveyed to the station house, where it was found that he had received a stab or contusion on the forehead. City Physician Gillette was summoned and dressed his wounds, and the man is getting along all right. Two of the participants in the fight were arrested and sent up for trial. The others escaped into North Plainfield. Shannon has for a short time been in the employ of Mr. Hyde, this city. All the participants in this fight were drunk. Judge Good, however, sobers all such cases when they are brought before him.

MISS CELIA E. GARDNER, of our city, the author of several works of prose and poetry, the latest of which—"Every Inch a King," our readers will remember a notice of in this paper, has just completed another work entitled "A Woman's Wiles," issued by the eminent publishers, Geo. W. Carleton & Co., in their usual style, and making the sixth of Miss Gardner's published works, and the fifth issued by this firm, and we can state as showing her publishers' confidence in this lady's ability, that Messrs. Carleton made a contract for this work before a word of it was written. The work is a high class novel, and yet wholly founded upon fact, every chapter being full of thrilling interest, and literally proves that "truth is stronger than fiction." There is a little history attached to it of which we can only give an outline. Some time ago a gentleman in Maine, (an editor of a prominent paper) wrote Carleton & Co. for Miss Gardner's address, and thro' them to her, stating he had the details of a strange story, wholly true, and himself one of the principals, had read all Miss Gardner's novels, and would like to see the story written in her style, would furnish all the facts, and desired no interest in it, further than he already had, excepting to do everything in his power to make it a success. We have seen the advanced sheets and can promise our readers a rare treat in its perusal, and predict for it a large edition. Shall notice it further as soon as the work is completed.

Cherry Street

Needs cleaning. We have frequently called attention to the fact, and wondered why our efficient Street Commissioner did not attend to it. Now we know the cause, when we are informed by him that he can get no money from the City for doing the work. In order, however, to have the street cleaned of its coat of filth, a number of the business men on the street from Front Street to the Railroad, have subscribed a sufficient sum to enable the work to be done.

A New Directory.

Messrs. Flanagan and Scudder, agents, are now canvassing our city for a business directory of Central Railroad of New Jersey, which will contain the names of merchants, manufacturers, &c., of the cities, towns and villages on the line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and its branches, including Allentown, Bethlehem, Easton and Freemansburg, of Pennsylvania. This work will be a valuable one, and every merchant of our city should have his advertisement in it. The subscription price of the book is $3.00.

New Jersey's Day.

To-day Jerseymen will flock in thousands to the Centennial Grounds, this day being commemorated as Jersey Day on the grounds. Gov. Bedle will receive calls at the Jersey House this afternoon. Numbers of our fellow citizens have gone to the Exhibition judging from the fact obtained from Ticket Agent Eddie Nelson, that the sale of tickets for the Exhibition Grounds up to one o'clock to-day at this station is 297. Out of that number 275 were "New Jersey Day" tickets.

A Thief Captured.

The family of Mr. Samuel R. Jackson, residing on Central Avenue, being on a Summer vacation, their residence of course was closed up. Last Friday afternoon one John Murray, belonging to the great army of tramps entered the building and was packing up a number of valuable goods for transportation, when he was detected in his little game by a colored man living next door, named John L. Perry, who attempted to seize the thief. That individual, however, drew a revolver and threatening to shoot Perry, started on a run for the distant woods. An alarm was promptly given by Perry, and a number of persons started in pursuit of the would-be burglar, who ran through woods, corn fields and by-places until he entered the swamp near New Brooklyn. The swamp was surrounded and thief finally captured by Frederick E. Valentine, David and Newton Randolph, not, however, until the scoundrel drew his revolver and attempted to shoot his pursuers. He was finally knocked to the earth with a club and thus captured. During the chase several shots were fired over him to bring him to terms, but without effect. He was taken before Judge Good, who after a hearing committed him to the Union County Jail to await trial. On his way there, he so battered his handcuffs that it required the aid of a hammer to free his hands from them. On Sunday afternoon last he tried to hang himself in his cell by means of a strip of his bed sheet, which he fastened to the grating of his door. He left a letter stating that he was tired of life and had respectable parents in Pennsylvania. The warden of the jail cut him down and it is his opinion that Murray did not try very hard to hang himself. He is evidently a bad one.

Personalia.

We return thanks to our old friend George Smock, of Dunellen, for an immense musk melon.

We have been in luck this week. Besides receiving melons and pears from kind friends, our old and esteemed friend Joseph H. Edwards, of Westfield, sends us a basket of delicious apples from his farm. "Uncle Joe," may your shadow never grow less.

Alex. Thorn, of the firm of Berry & Thorn, is confined to his residence by sickness.

Carmon Parse, Esq. has returned home from his trip through Pennsylvania, looking and feeling much better for his recreation.

Mr. Halstead Compton will please accept our thanks for two large and delicious melons.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

Alfred Berry, Esq. on Wednesday last, broke ground for a large fire well on his premises, next to Green Brook, on Somerset Street. The well is to be five feet funnel and to contain six foot of water when completed. Mr. Berry is to be commended for this generous move, inasmuch as the well will prove of incalculable benefit to surrounding property in case of fire when the water in the brook is low. The distance from the surface of the well to water will be but six feet.

Next Saturday at 3 o'clock p. m., the Democrats of North Plainfield will hold a primary meeting at Demler's Hotel, to select delegates to attend the Congressional Convention at Washington, Warren Co., on Thursday, August 31st, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The School Trustees have reduced the janitor's salary to $12 per month. Economy.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

On Tuesday afternoon last, two young lads named Andrew Jackman and McMorry became involved in an altercation about who should go after the cows, and a fracas ensued in which young Jackman was stabbed in the groin by the other lad. The wound is a serious but not necessarily fatal one.

Joseph H. Edwards, Esq., is erecting a fine residence for himself on the property formerly owned by Mr. John Prentiss, on the Springfield road. Mr. E. started out to re-model the old house, but the more he tore down the structure the more convinced he became that it was necessary to build a new house, and with his usual spirit of enterprise he has determined now to erect a building that will be an ornament to the section where he resides.

DUNELLEN DOTTINGS.

THE main audience room of the Dunellen Methodist Episcopal Church has been very neatly fitted up. Notwithstanding the hard times, the Society, under the lead of its pastor, C. S. Woodruff, has gone boldly on in the enterprise. The main audience room has not only been fitted up, but the outside of the church building is being very much improved. The dedication services will be held September 7th to the 11th. Bishop Janes, Dr. C. N. Sims, of Brooklyn, Rev. Wm. Loyd, of N. Y., J. H. Vincent, D. D., Revs. J. L. Hurlbut, J. R. Bryan, J. W. Marshall and others are expected to be present and officiate.

Howard Bird, Esq., who has a fine country residence near Dunellen, has been troubled lately by parties netting in the stream which runs by his place, one particular person, of stout proportions, persisting in frequently violating the law in this respect contrary to the warnings of Mr. Bird, who has at last concluded to load up his shot gun, and give that stout man especially, a warm reception when he comes again. Due notice thereof will accordingly be taken.

Joseph Laing, the confectioner, is erecting a house on Main street.

Chas. Cambeck, the proprietor of the Livery Stables, is doing a good business. He is accommodating and has fine turnouts at reasonable figures.

The Dunellen Hotel, Wm. P. Hughes, proprietor, is liberally patronized by the travelling public.

Green Brook in the vicinity of Dunellen affords excellent sport to the disciples of Isak Walton in dace fishing. Our staunch Democratic friend, Stout, has extraordinary good luck it is said every time he goes out. But then that's no wonder, for he can talk a fish out of his natural element by his convincing way of arguing.

Attention, Democrats!

In another column will be found the call of the President of the Jackson Democrat Club of Plainfield, for a meeting next Wednesday evening for the purpose of reorganizing the Club for the campaign. It is the earnest desire to have a full attendance of all who favor the election of Tilden and Hendricks.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Some excitement was occasioned in this village on Wednesday, 23d inst., at Brittin's Hotel, caused by sundry "litigations" growing out of the alleged trespassing of Mrs. S. J. Stratton's fowls upon the premises of Mr. J. B. Clark. It appears that Mr. Clark, failing to get a "redress of grievances" by moral suasion, goes for legal advice to his illustrious namesake, Judge Joseph Clark, M. D., knowing him to be well "learned in the law," as well as the medical profession. His Honor, governed by the impulse of the moment, advised his client to arm himself, and in the habiliments of a warrior to "go gunning" in his old age. The advice was taken; Mr. C. being a "crack marksman," a rooster was killed. Mrs. S. not being particularly pleased with "the proceedings," brings a suit "in trespass" before His Hon. Judge C. against the modern Nimrod, claiming damages in the sum of five dollars. On the "return" of the summons the fair plaintiff was non-suited with costs. Another suit was immediately instituted; and then still another in which she claims that the defendant contrary to an agreement had with her had shut down his gate and prevented her from the free use of water to her damage, $50. And yet another suit is brought in which uncle John gets on the defensive and makes counter charges for damages sustained on account of said rooster, which, alas! is no more, and sundry other fowl of like evil propensities, he too claiming damages in the like sum of $50. Able counsel were employed on both sides, Mrs. S. being represented by Messrs. Maxson & VanWinkle, the astute lawyers of Plainfield, and Mr. C. by the eloquent and indefatigable Bolton, of Westfield. The trials began at 10 o'clock on that day, and continued until the three were disposed of. In the first two juries were had, and as usual, disagreed. The third being tried by His Honor was disposed of on quick time. "And thus endeth the (three) first lessons."

On Thursday evening, Aug. 17, a Tilden and Hendricks Democratic Reform Association was organized in this village. Mr. C. W. L. Martine was elected President, Thos. Mead, Vice President, Dr. Bergen, Sec'y, George W. Marsh, Corresponding Secretary and John Barmann, Treas. A preamble, constitution and by-laws were adopted, quite a goodly number signed the T. & H. roll, and the meeting adjourned with the utmost enthusiasm and good feeling, to meet again on Tuesday evening, 22d inst., and on each succeeding Tuesday evening until after election.

Judge James Buchanan, of Trenton, paid a short visit to his brother, the Rev. J. C. Buchanan, at this village, on Saturday, the 19th inst.

The regular monthly meeting of Excelsior Hook & Ladder Co. No. 1, of this village, was held in their rooms on Monday evening last. In the absence of the Foreman, 1st Ass't. Jno. C. Moore occupied the chair.

The Rev. J. C. Buchanan, with his family, are sojourning for a few days with their friends in Hunterdon county.

Thos. J. Nicholl, of this village, deputy sheriff, has recently returned with his family from a somewhat protracted visit at Saratoga, all seemingly feeling the benefits of mineral water influences.

The regular meeting of the Tilden and Hendrick's Reform Association of this village was held in their rooms, Dean's building, on Tuesday evening, 22d inst., at 7:30 o'clock. An early adjournment was had in order to give the members an opportunity of attending the great ratification meeting in Plainfield on the same evening.

The annual picnic of the Scotch Plains Baptist Church Sunday School, takes place on Wednesday next, 30th inst., to Acker's Grove, on Woodbridge Bay. They go in carriages and intend starting from the church at 7:30 o'clock a. m. A pleasant time is anticipated.

THE Third Annual Fall games of the Plainfield Athletic Club will take place on Thursday, Oct. 5th, at the Plainfield Driving Park. The exercises will consist of the following: 10 mile walk, 100 yd. dash, ¼, ½, and 1 mile run, running broad jump, standing broad jump, throwing base ball, 3 mile walk, vaulting with pole, hurdle race, 120 yds. over 6 hurdles, 3ft. 6in. high, sack race, and 2 handicap races, viz: 100 yd. dash and ½ mile run. The exercises will be open to all amateurs who shall comply with the conditions of entry, which are—that each person desiring to enter shall send his name, address, and a description of colors (which all must wear) to the Sec'y. of the P. A. C. on or before the 25th day of Sept., upon which date the entries will close; each entry must be accompanied by the sum of $1, which fee will not be returned, but retained and devoted to increasing the value of prizes. This plan is in accordance with the rules of all English Amateur Associations, and is universally practiced by them, also by a majority of our American clubs. Immediately after the closing of the entries, and as soon as the programme can be arranged, it will be printed, giving the name of each competitor, number, name of club, and colors; and in the handicaps the distance allowed each contestant. This will enable spectators to readily distinguish their friends. The programme will also contain the rules governing the games and notices to competitors; it will be published far enough in advance to give all an opportunity to make themselves familiar with the contents. An admission fee to the grounds will be charged. The public will please take notice that at 12 o'clock M. on the 5th of Oct., the grounds will be turned over to the P. A. C., after which hour no horses or vehicles will be allowed on the track.

An Elegant Gift.

A pleasant surprise occurred at the Freeholders' dinner, given at the Sheridan House on the 2[illegible]d inst. The members of the Board of Freeholders and other county officers procured a magnificent set of silver of eight pieces, and arranged affairs so admirably that the gentleman who was to be the recipient was completely taken by surprise.

After the cloth had been removed, Mr. Freeholder Robert A. Russell arose and said:

MR. DIRECTOR AYRES,—I have been requested by the Board of Freeholders and other county officers to perform a duty that is as pleasing to myself as it will evidently be gratifying to you. It is now near fifteen years since I first met you in the Board of Freeholders, both being members at that time; and it affords me pleasure to state that during the intervening period nothing has occurred to mar our intercourse, either officially or otherwise. As a representative of the interests of the county you have always shown yourself to be an honest, honorable and upright man, which fact has been handsomely recognized by your being selected to preside over the County Board.

As a recognition of the esteem and kindly feeling entertained for you, I have been requested to present you an elegant silver set, which it is believed you will receive and preserve more as an evidence of friendship than from any intrinsic value it may possibly possess. This gift may be regarded as especially appropriate at this time, when the fact is considered that you have had the boldness, and sought to establish a reputation for vigorous manhood by taking to yourself a better half, and at a time, too, when you were believed to be in the "sere and yellow leaf," and had passed the period when you could be awakened to love and sentimentality. May the memento now presented be received and cherished by yourself, your wife and children, with the same generous feeling that prompted its donation by your friends of the Board and other county officials.

Mr. Director Ayres, so confused and surprised as a blushing school miss, arose and said he felt at loss to find language to express himself appropriately for the unexpected honor conferred upon him. As highly as he should ever prize the gift he could assure the donors that no memento was needed to add warmth to the friendship he entertained and hoped ever to cherish for all members of the Board and the kind gentlemen who, by their act, had extended to him their esteem and respect. He again thanked his friends for the honor conferred.

The whole affair passed off happily. Such pleasant episodes are well calculated to soften political asperities and the genial influence produced are worthy of remembrance.—Elizabeth Herald.

We congratulate our respected friend and townsman on the honor conferred upon him. He is deserving of the same.

FINE JOB PRINTING AT LOW RATES.

GRAND
Democratic Demonstration!!
BANNER RAISING
PLAINFIELD AWAKE!
The Largest Political Gathering ever witnessed in Plainfield!
UNITY, HARMONY, EARNESTNESS.

Last Tuesday afternoon and evening the political ball was fairly opened in Plainfield by the Democrats, and to say that the occasion was one of grand success to the advocates of Honesty and Reform, and terrorism to the followers of Grant, Hayes & Co. is but re-expressing the sentiment of all participants in the banner raising and speech making on the above mentioned occasion.

Promptly at 5 o'clock p. m. the handsomest Banner in the State was unfurled to the breeze in front of the headquarters of the "Young Men's Tilden & Hendrick's Reform Club" on North Avenue, amid cheering from the assembled multitude and music by a brass band. All things being in readiness for swinging the banner, the officers of the Club, accompanied by distinguished citizens of Plainfield and other places, marched from the club room to the balcony in front of Flagg's Hotel building opposite and took seats thereon. The beautiful banner was then run out and amid wild cheering from the 500 persons assembled below, John H. Jackson, Esq., President of the Club, introduced our respected fellow-citizen and Liberal Republican, Wm. B. Maxson, Esq., who proceeded to address the assemblage from the balcony. Mr. Maxson in an eloquent and forcible manner proceeded to recount the misdoings and mismanagement of the Republican party, giving facts and figures which told heavily against the Republican candidates. His language was couched in the most gentlemanly and courteous tones. There was none of the abuse and vituperation indulged in by Republican speakers in his ringing speech of nearly an hour's duration. He alluded to the profligacy and shameful doings of the party now in power; how honesty was ignored by them in the insulting and displacement from office of every official who dared to raise his hand against the thieving and corruption practiced by the head officials. He paid glowing tributes to those honest men of the Republican party who dared to come out and denounce the infamous course of the present administration, and pictured to his listeners the cause of the present stagnation in business and the reason why thousands of the honest, hard working toilers of the land were out of employment. All the cause of the misdoings of the present administration, which has violated the trust reposed in them by the people; closing with an earnest appeal to his hearers of all classes and political proclivities to join hands and help re-construct the Government on an honest basis by the election of Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, honest men and statesmen. His remarks were attentively listened to by the large and growing assemblage, and was frequently interrupted by loud and continued applause. President Jackson then introduced Mr. Algernon S. Sullivan, of New York, who in a rousing speech of half an hour held the large assemblage spell bound, closing with an eulogy on the dead ex Speaker of the House, Michael C. Kerr. Mr. Sullivan said:—"The House over which Mr. Kerr presided has just adjourned. Its committees, investigating the past management of our Government, filled the country with alarm and shame by disclosures of turpitude and corruption. Offices were pensioned out as personal gifts, and administered solely for personal and partisan ends. In very many cases public office was simply a convenience of downright robbery, and in still more for profligate waste. The comfort, the substance, the very life of the industrious people of the land was being eaten up. In the meantime the party in power sat by willfully blind and mute. The Republican party was once a grand party, but the virtue seemed to have died out of it. Abuses multiplied in all branches of the Legislative and Executive departments of Government. Year after year affairs went from bad to worse. Democrats protested and warned. The masses began to murmur. The independent press and some Republican papers began to remonstrate. Chief Justice Chase and Charles Sumner and Horace Greeley tried to arrest the downward progress, but all in vain. The party management wherever and whatever it was, whether in persons or in the constituent tendencies of the party organization, has gone on unheeding, until the country has become almost ruined financially, and the Government is demoralized and disgraced. The masses of the Republican party are responsible for this.—They cannot plead misplaced confidence and abuse by their leaders. They had repeated opportunities to remedy the evil. They despised all rebukes. They drowned all argument in their parrot chorus: 'Great is Diana of Ephesians'; 'the party did great things at its birth.'"

With music by the band and rousing cheers for Tilden and Hendricks, the vast multitude dispersed to meet again at Laing's Hall at 8 o'clock in the evening to listen to remarks from eminent speakers. The Hall was densely packed with attentive listeners, even the aisles being filled with people standing up, while large numbers were compelled to stand outside the doors and windows to listen to the speeches, being unable to gain an entrance for the crowd. As the speakers headed by the officers of the Young Men's Reform Club, preceded by Pres. Jackson, also prominent citizens and members of the Club, ascended the platform of the large Hall, they were greeted by thundering applause. On one side of the stage were seated Hon. Joseph W. Yates, His Honor, Mayor Sutphen, Wm. B. Maxson, Esq., and a dozen other prominent citizens of Plainfield, Scotch Plains and Westfield, while on the other the Young Men's Reform Club was represented by a number of its members. The President of the Club, Mr. Jackson, stepped foward and after stating the object of the meeting invited His Honor, Mayor John C. Sutphen, to act as chairman of the meeting. As this gentleman stepped to the front he was greeted with a storm of applause. He opened the meeting by a few well-chosen and timely remarks, and then introduced Mr. J. Fairfax McLaughlin, of New York, as the first speaker of the evening. We wish we could re-produce this gentleman's remarks, which were received with frequent and prolonged bursts of applause. In scathing terms he denounced and laid bare the monstrous acts of our present rulers, and showed how, with the election of Hayes (who he had nothing to say against), the same pernicious course would be continued. He appealed to the young men to pause before they cast their ballots for a continuance of the present shameful proceedings of the administration, which would surely follow if Hayes was elected. His election would be nothing less than a continuance of Grantism. He appealed to the middle aged and the old to cast their ballots at the approaching election for Honesty and Reform, for Tilden and Hendricks. There was none of that venomous, spiteful talk against our opponents, in his speech, that is invariably indulged in by Republican speakers of the day, but in an earnest, impassioned way he pictured the necessity of a change of Government, the necessity of a change that would insure better times to the workingman and a revival of our commerce. The present party in power had pledged themselves to honestly and faithfully administer the affairs of government. How have they kept their word? For sixteen years, while handling the reins of government, they have been going from bad to worse, violating every solemn obligation, until we now stand on the verge of ruin, unless a helping hand is held forth to wrest the invaded power from them. Mr. McLaughlin was succeeded by Hon. Algernon S. Sullivan, of N. Y., who gave another of his ringing speeches. In the course of his remarks and speaking of the Republican party in its days of wisdom, he said:—"It is only just to say it was a grand party in many respects, and it is equally just to say it has miserably fallen. Considering its origin and the motives of the leading men who formed it, but who have all been trampled under foot by it, its history is a lamentable spectacle, and its fall an ignominy and a calamity to the people. The lesson is this, a party is responsible for bad administration if it tolerates it one day. The Republican party was afraid to adopt Bristow lest it would imply a rebuke of Grantism; it ought to have felt afraid to reject Bristow lest thereby it adopted Grantism. By that sin they fell. They either lacked honest convictions or they lacked the courage of their convictions, and either alternative disqualifies them for continued power. But, my fellow-citizens, you ask what better does the Democracy offer? I answer, many things, but chiefly these: It promises economy and it points to the $30,000,000 in taxes saved by the Democratic House of Representatives, and to the $7,000,000 saved in the State tax of New York. It promises information to the people as to actual condition and management of affairs, and it points to the Congressional investigations which have just been finished and those which are in progress, and it will continue to let in the light. It promises thorough administrative reform, and it points to Samuel J. Tilden. His deeds are known of all men. What he began in New York he will carry on at Washington. The axe is laid at the root of the tree. It promises to restore a sense of public honor in public service. It promises a revenue reform that shall equalize the burden of taxation, and do away with bounties and exemptions to the few. It promises to stop the Republican system of repudiating the greenbacks, and to restore honest hard money. It promises to faithfully redeem the public debt. It promises to protect inviolate, as ever has been its special mission, the equal civil rights of all citizens, the humblest as well as the highest. I have often expressed, and I now repeat, my solemn conviction that the day is near at hand when the colored people of these States will realize that there is only one party which puts the personal rights of the humblest citizen above all considerations of property, and that is the Democratic party. From the days of the Alien and Sedition laws down, whenever the monuments of civil liberty were involved, in any public affairs the foremost, the persistent, and the last champions of the constitutional and natural rights have been Democrats, and it will ever be so."

Mayor Sutphen then read a telegram from Hon. Leon Abbett, regretting his inability to be present at the meeting, but expressing his hearty and well wishes for the success of the same.

Mr. Wm. B. Maxson was then announced to make a few closing remarks, in the course of which, in alluding to the host of Liberal Republicans who have left the Republican party and come out under the banner of Reform, and the manner in which they are treated by the party whom they formerly affiliated with, he said he was proud to acknowledge himself a Liberal; he and others who had joined the ranks of the workers for Reform had not left the party, the party had left them. He closed his remarks with an earnest appeal to his hearers to do all that lay in their power to assist in the election of Tilden and Hendricks, the candidates of the people against those of the party who have become so corrupt that honest men can no longer tolerate their doings. At the close of Mr. Maxson's remarks, which were received with frequent applause, Mr. Sullivan stepped forward and proposed three cheers for Tilden and Hendricks, the Reform candidates; and if ever Laing's Hall resounded with honest cheers they did then. The vast assemblage, to a man, raised to their feet and gave such a cheer that must have made the heart's of the supporters of Hayes and Wheeler quake. Cheers were also given with a will for the speakers of the evening, the officers of the Young Men's Reform Club, after which the audience quietly dispersed to their homes.

This opening meeting of the campaign in favor of Honesty and Reform augers well for the success of the ticket in Plainfield. Nearly 1000 persons attended the meeting at Laing's Hall, and the gathering was composed of the hard-fisted working men, the Liberal element and a sprinkling of Republicans, all of whom listened quietly and with wrapt attention to the words of the speakers. We doubt if ever before has there been such a gathering at a Democratic meeting in Plainfield.

To the young men of Plainfield, who have now fairly opened the campaign, belongs the credit of the perfect success attending the demonstration. The Young Men's Tilden and Hendricks Reform Club has many active workers in its ranks which will tell heavily on the opposition in the approaching election. It is efficiently officered and is daily receiving acquisitions to its ranks in the good cause it advocates. The Democracy of Plainfield is thoroughly united and aroused to the important issue at stake. All credit and praise is due those Liberal Republicans who so energetically and boldly have come forward to espouse the cause. Their numbers throughout the county is legion, and Plainfield is not without her full quota. The banner which was raised on the above occasion is 30x40 feet in dimensions, open net work, with the names and likenesses of the candidates on either side. It is swung from a wire cable stretched from the roof of the building occupied by the Club to that of the building owned by Mr. Wm. Flagg opposite, adjoining the office of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST. The likenesses on the banner were painted by the well-known artist, Julian Scott, who resides in this city. Mr. Scott is to be congratulated upon the beauty and perfectness of the portraits painted by him for this banner.

Westfield was represented at the evening meeting by four large wagon loads of the members of the Tilden & Hendricks Club of that village. Scotch Plains was also represented by a delegation from the Tilden Club of that place.

The Raritan Cornet Band, Mr. Brighton, leader, which furnished music for the occasion is to be congratulated upon the excellency of the music furnished. This band has improved wonderfully of late, and those in search of good music at reasonable rates should secure their services.

FIRE MATTERS.

A barn and sheds situated on the Quary Farm, in Washington Valley, were totally destroyed by fire Monday evening last, together with their contents, viz: wagons, harness, half ton of hay, ton of feed, &c., two horses and a team of mules were also burned to death. The barn belonged to Mr. Wallace Vail, of this city, and was insured for $400. His loss is $600. The horses, mules and other material burned, were the property of Mr. Lawrence Austin, contractor. His loss is about $1,500, with no insurance. The fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin, and the brute who could so maliciously set fire to a building wherein is confined dumb beasts, and then leave them to their fate, ought to be scalped and then thrown into the flames. It is surmised that the premises were fired by workmen discharged from the Quarry by Mr. Austin a few days previous.

The light from the burning barn in Washington Valley on Monday evening last caused an alarm of fire in this city, and steamer No. 2, Warren No. 3 and Zephyr H. & L. Co., No. 1 turned out. The Gazelle steamer and Alert Hose Companies did not turn out, nor was the alarm bell struck, the members wisely discerning that the fire was a long way off.

Gazelle Steamer No. 1, will test the fire well on Mr. Berry's property, at 4 o'clock p. m., this day.

An examination has been made of the business affairs of E. F. Williams, the alleged accomplice of Assistant Cashier Fairbanks in the embezzlement from the State National Bank of Elizabeth. His assets were found to be between $15,000 and $16,000, and his liabilities $60,000, in which is included $[illegible] cash which he obtained from the bank. Seth B. Ryder has been appointed assignee.

At three o'clock Saturday morning Patrick Fitzpatrick, a workman on the Delaware and Bound Brook Railroad, was run over by a freight train south of Hopewell, in Mercer County, and cut to pieces. Every limb was broken, and his skull was mashed in. He had laid down between the rails and taken off his shoes and stockings. He was about thirty years of age, and has two brothers living in Harlem, New York.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has made a beginning at Rahway in the general improvement in local depots decided upon some time ago. The present depot is of wood and is unsightly and inconvenient. The new one will be a handsome brick structure with two tracks on each side, an English switch and signal system, and an arrangement for receiving and delivering mails to through trains. The old depot and platform were sold at auction on Monday evening.

Proceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders.

ELIZABETH, Aug 23, 1876.

At eleven o'clock this morning the Board of Chosen Freeholders met, all the members being present except Mr. Hubbard.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The committee appointed to examine and report upon the proposed Adams street bridge, in Rahway, reported in favor of building the bridge, the estimate cost being $5.500.

The committee appointed to issue and sell $45,000 of bonds, reported that they had fulfilled the object for which they were appointed, having sold the bonds at rates ranging from one and one-half to five and a quarter per cent premium, according to the length of time the bonds were to run, the premiums averaging nearly three and a half per cent. on the whole.

RESOLUTIONS.

A resolution was introduced that an iron bridge be built on Adams street Rahway, at a cost not to exceed $5,500.

Mr. Baldwin opposed the adoption of this resolution, and wished to have it laid over and action upon it postponed for the present. He said bridges were needed worse elsewhere.

Mr. Russel said the bridge was very much needed. The street was graded, and people were living upon it beyond the river and they needed the bridges.

Mr. Pierson said the bridge should be built, as there is much travel on the street and the present bridge—a private one—is insufficient.

The motion to postpone was lost, and the resolution adopted.

THE GREEN BROOK BRIDGE.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Hubbard that a committee be appointed to meet with a committee from the Somerset Board of Freeholders to consider the propriety of building a bridge over Green Brook, in Plainfield. In offering this resolution Mr. Randolph said it had not been the intention of the Board to erect this bridge, but he had been recently told that funerals on their way to the cemetery adjoining had been obliged to go a long way round and cross by another bridge, on account of the unsafe condition of the present structure. He therefore thought the matter should be considered.

The resolution was adopted, and Messrs. Randolph, Martine and Briant were appointed as the committee.

The Board then adjourned to meet again eight weeks from to-day, at eleven o'clock in the morning.

The Director then announced dinner at Mr. Miller's at half-past twelve.

It is gratifying to find so many Republicans who recognize the ability of Mr. Tilden, and acknowledge that he is the fit man for President. Mr. Tilden's Republican vote in this city and State will be very large. He has won these Republicans over by sheer force of character and actual reform.—New York Sun, Aug. 9.

"Live within your income," said Samuel J. Tilden to the Secretary of the Treasury in 1865; "there is no royal road for a Government than for an individual or a corporation." Had this advice been heeded, the people would not have been in their impoverished and uncertain condition to-day.—New York Sun.

If Mr. Tilden should be elected President, and should carry out to the letter the programme which he outlines, he would be the best and greatest President that has ever been in the White House.—Philadelphia Telegraph, Rep.

If the late Postmaster-General be such a Jewell of a Reformer, how is it that he is found working in such good accord with the men who, under Grant, are responsible for all the corruption that exists in the Government!

INDIANA LOST TO HAYES.

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 21.—The Sentinel of to-morow will publish the following letter, written to Gov. Hayes by Gen. Kilpatrick, and discovered by accident. It was evidently a copy of the letter sent and was meant to be preserved, but was dropped. The handwriting is an exact facsimile of Gen. Kilpatrick's signature on the hotel register. The majority of counties visited by Gen. Kilpatrick have previously been strongly Republican and have less independent strength than other counties in the State:

GRAND HOTEL, INDIANAPOLIS,
Aug. 21, 1876.

DEAR SIR:—I have just finished the tour of six counties in Indiana, and feeling that any reliable information from this State will interest you, I write. In the first place the canvass is well conducted, the people are enthusiastic and determined, and the old war spirit thoroughly aroused, and if it were not for one thing we could rest certain of victory in October. There is an Independent party in this State, confined, it is true, to a few counties, but formidable, and it will defeat Gen. Harrison. There is but one way to overcome this movement. The leaders of the Independents are poor, needy, and in debt. They must be lectured to, and documents must be placed in their hands, that they may be convinced of their folly. A bloody shirt campaign, with money, and Indiana is safe. A financial campaign and no money, and we are beaten. The National Committee has done nothing for Indiana. Alone they are fighting their battle, and bravely, but unless the National Committee wakes up and does its duty to you, to the party and the country, defeat is certain in October. I never in my life felt so certain I was doing my duty as in this contest, and my desire for success, my dear sir, is my only excuse for writing to you.

Your friend,
J. KILPATRICK.

LOOKING FORWARD.

Why turn, faint spirit, to the vanished past?
Why grieve that some vain imagine might have been?
Why brood o'er broken hearts no longer thine,
Or sigh for conquests thou may'st never win?
Leave the poor faded hope and trust long dead,
And nurse the heart's unfolding bosom instead!

Fling your misgivings to the idle wind:
Fruition is the patient soul's reward—
Thy path through trouble to the good man's goal
Let not these petty weaknesses retard—
Tread with unfaltering step the rugged way
That leads to triumph in the perfect day!

Press not thy bosom, like the imprisoned bird,
In sad repinings 'gainst the bars of fate;
What though the skies are sometimes hung in cloud,
Deem not, therefore, thy whole life desolate;
Make thy own destiny, though dangers throng—
Fearless advance, with every step grow strong!

Turn not thy mind's eye inward, where a waste
Spreads 'neath the spirit's sky of doubtful gloom
But look thou rather to the scenes without,
Where all God's fairest, noblest treasures bloom;
Forget thyself—cast each dull clog aside—
And look in trust above, what'er betide!

Fold not thy hands in weary, dull despair,
Whatever shadows thy fair hopes enshroud—
Steep not thy life away in idle dreams;
Nerve thee for God's own work—nor heed the cloud
That breaks above thee; 'twill bring release,
Care fade away and struggle end in peace!

HUMAN NATURE IN NEWBERN, N. C.

It is the same here as in Cairo or in New Jersey. The other day when a Tarheel with sunken eyes and hery high cheek bones sat down on the steps of a grocery beside several others, he sighed heavily and asked:

"Gentlemen, if any of you found a five on the sidewalk, would you hunt for the owner?"

"I would," came from each individual with promptness and dispatch.

"Haven't any of you lost a five, have you," anxiously continued the man.

"I have," answered one, and the echo went all along the line.

"Describe her, gentlemen," he then remarked.

One said his had a figure '5' on it. Another said his had a picture of De Soto discovering the Mississippi river. A third said the words 'U. S.' were plain to be seen on the bill that fell out of his vest pocket.

"Gentlemen, this five don't tally," mournfully remarked Tarheel. "None of you have hit the description within a mile and a sand bar."

"Let's see it," asked two or three at once.

"It's a five, and I found it on the walk," he whispered, holding out his hand.

The five was a nickle. Some of the crowd leaned back and held their hands on their outraged hearts, while others rose up, carefully brushed their coat tails, and said it was time to go home. Only one of the victims seemed to appreciate the situation. He chuckled, and gurgled, and gasped, and asked the stranger what he would take.

"Whiskey straight," was the prompt reply.

"So would I if I ever drank," said the citizen.

"PLAYING DEAD."

The Fairmount (Neb.) Bulletin tells this funny little story: During a noontime play spell at one of our schools, a short time since, some little girls conceived the idea of playing dead. One of them assumed the role of corpse, and suffered herself to be "laid out" on the benches, to be viewed and remarked upon, according to the manner of their elders. Their teacher had laid himself out upon one of the benches in the school-room, pretending to be asleep, but was really enjoying the frolics of the children, when one lisping 5 years old discovered him, and straightway exclaimed to her mates:

"O, teacher's dead!"

They were all immediately interested and began their remarks, which made him also feel anxious to hear the opinions of the several pupils. They passed all around him, laying their hands upon his forehead, shaking their pretty heads in all solemnity, each one making her own little remark, such as "He makes a pretty corpse," "How his mother must feel;" "It's a pity he died so young," etc. Then came a little 5 year old, who, with earnest countenance and subdued voice, said: "Yeth, he lookth natural, but he smellth bad." The fun had reached its climax; the teacher rolled off the bench in a fit of laughter, and the children ran away.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

When Thomas Jefferson was President of the United States, he received a present of wine from the Spanish Embassador at Washington. Jefferson bethought him that the Embassador had introduced this wine free of duty, as was his privilege, and that he (Jefferson) had no such privilege, and no right to drink imported wine without paying duty thereon according to law. So he addressed to the Collector at Philadelphia a letter, which we print from the original, verbatim, as follows:

"WASHINGTON, FEB. 6, 1803.

Dear Sir:—Mons. d'Yrujo, the Spanish Minister here, has been so kind as to spare me 200 bottles of Champagne, part of a larger parcel imported for his own use, and consequently privileged from duty, but it would be improper for me to take the benefit of that. I must therefore ask the favor of you to take the proper measures for paying the duty, for which I enclose you a bank check for 22 1-2 dollars, the amount of it. If it could be done without mentioning my name, it would avoid ill-tended observations, as in some such way as this, 'by duty paid on a part of such a parcel of wines not entitled to privilege,' or in any other way you please. The wine was imported into Philadelphia, probably about Mid-summer last. Accept assurances of my great esteem and respect.

TH. JEFFERSON.

Gen. Muhlenburg."

Will the gentlemen who serve the United States at home and abroad "read, mark, and inwardly digest" the above letter? Those who do so may possibly learn why Mr. Jefferson was the most popular and powerful statesman this country has ever known.

A few nights ago, as a young man stood in the gospel tent busily taking notes, Dr. Tyng came up, and laying his hand upon the other's shoulder suddenly asked, "My friend are you a Christian?" "No, Sir," answered the startled note taker, "I'm—I'm only a reporter."

The train of thought and new ideas carries many off their course.

A WORD FOR THE WOMEN.

We do not hesitate to say that the average women, educated in the better class of schools in this country, is a better scholar, and a more capable and accomplished person than the average college graduate of the other sex. What we want is cheaper schools of equal excellence. The farmer's boy goes to college, finds cheap tuition, wins a scholarship, perhaps, boards in commons, earns money during vacation and gets through, while his sister stays at home, because the only places where she can get an equal education are expensive beyond her means. There is no college that needs to be so richly endowed as a woman's college. Women are not men, quarrel with that fact as we may, and they cannot get along so cheaply and with such helpfulness as men while going through the processes of their education. If we are to have women's colleges, we must have well-paid professors, philosophical apparatus, cabinets, collections, art-galleries, laboratories, and they must be provided for by private munificence. Provision should be made for the poor, so that high education shall come within the reach of all. There is not a woman's college, or an advanced public institution for the education of women that is not to-day in need of large endowments for the purpose of bringing its advantages within the reach of those whose means are small.

Now we commend this matter particularly to rich women. There are many scattered up and down the country, wondering what they shall do with their money when, and even before, they die. To all these we beg the privilege of commending this great object. Let the boys alone. They have been pretty well taken care of already, and the men will look after them. It is for you, as women wishing well to your sex, and anxious for its elevation in all possible ways, to endow these institutions that are springing up about the country in its interest, so that the poor shall have an equal chance with the rich. You can greatly help to give the young women of all classes as good a chance as their brothers enjoy, and you can hardly claim a "great deal of womanly feeling if you do not do it.

A certain Assessor, whose name need not be mentioned, went to a house down town, and after transacting the usual business, asked if they had a dog. "No dog; no, sir," was the reply. In the meantime Johnny was holding old "Fido" under the porch, but a few feet from the Assessor, and with his little fingers clutched tightly in his collar.—Everything went along first rate until the family cat made a change of base, passing immediately in front of "Fido's" watchful eyes. Out he went with an enthusiastic yelp, upsetting Johnny and filling his little mouth and eyes full of sand. The officer thought the dog wished to see him on some important business, and mounted the fence in "one time and two motions," and inquired in a half-sarcastic manner: "You don't keep a dog, eh?" and then crawled down from the other side of the fence, and walked so that he could look behind without any particular effort. When at a safe distance he was seen to stop and write something in his book, which we are led to believe was to the effect that they kept a dog!—Trenton Sentinel.

A little girl once expressed very decidedly her expectations of going to heaven. One of her friends thought her over-confident, and told her so.—But the little one still held on to her firm confidence. She said, "I know that I am only a very little girl; but when we are all singing so sweetly up there, I think the Lord Jesus will miss me if I am not there singing too!"

Circumstantial evidence: "Circumstances alter cases, you know," remarked a Scotch lawyer to an old farmer client. "Verra true, sir," replied the farmer, "and cases alter circumstances as weel; for, man, I mind when ye were young and had but few cases, your circumstances werna ower braw."

When Brigham Young finds that the biscuit are burned and the meat is overdone, he puts on his hat and goes out and brings home a new wife. This course is calculated to make his wives careful.

NEW JERSEY
Enamel Paint Company,
RARITAN, NEW JERSEY.
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous base by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as is done in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either in-side or outside work or boat painting than any other Paint known in the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use.
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.
Liberal Inducements to Dealers.
And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.

Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price Mist and Sample Color Card, Address,

A New Business for Easton.

This morning we had a call from Mr. J. W. Lyon, a partner in a large Book Publishing Company in the East. Mr. Lyon is about to establish a branch office at Easton, from which their books will be issued for the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The firm deals in nothing but books of the better class, one of their works having reached the enormous circulation of 200,000 copies in this country, and double that in Europe. Mr. Lyon is about to bring out a new work, upon which one of our ablest writers has been steadily engaged for eleven years. Thirty artists in Europe and America are engaged on the illustrations, which have already cost $17,000 before a single copy of the book has been published. The book is a great national volume, entitled, "Our First Century." We wil give some particulars in regard to it to-morrow.

From the Daily Free Press, April 21.

Our First Century.

Mr. Lyon has shown us the prospectus of the above work, and we are ready to say that the manufacture, paper, style, and number of engravings and character of the work are far superior to any book we have ever seen sold by subscription, and a credit to our Centennial year, as many thousand copies are already being prepared for the press. The work will be issued far below the price usually asked for works of less value. The standing of the book is proved by the following named persons, who have highly recommended the book and ordered it for their own use, having been shown the written manuscript of the author before any part of it had been put in print. Their names are printed in the prospectus book in fac simile of their own writing, and their penmanship is a matter of real interest and curiosity for all to examine. The following is but a small portion of the orders received from public men at Washington:

U. S. Grant, President of the United States.
T. W. Ferry, Vice Pres. pro tem of the U. S.
W. T. Sherman, General of the U. S. Army.
M. C. Kerr, Speaker of the House.
Morrison R. Waite, Chief Justice of the U. S.
David D. Porter, Admiral of the Navy.
Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State.
Zachariah Chandler, Sec'y of the Interior.
George Robeson, Secretary of the Navy.
E. Pierrepont, Attorney General of the U. S.
Wm. A. Wallace, Senator from Penn.
Simon Cameron, Senator from Penn.
F. T. Frelinghuysen, Senator from N. J.
Geo. S. Boutwell, Senator from Mass.
Henry L. Dawes, Senator from Mass.
Wm. W. Eaton, Senator from Connecticut.
John A. Logan, Senator from Illinois.
O. P. Morton, Senator from Indiana.
I. P. Martin, Senator from Michigan.
A. G. Thurman, Senator from Ohio.
John Sherman, Senator from Ohio.
Judge Howe, Senator from Wisconsin.
G. G. Wright, Senator from Iowa.
W. B. Allison, Senator from Iowa.
Geo. F. Hoar, M. C. from Massachusetts.
H. L. Pierce, M. C. from Massachusetts.
C. W. Chapin, M. C. from Massachusetts.
N. P. Banks, M. C. from Massachusetts.
M. C. Hamilton, Senator from Texas.
A. H. Cragin, Senator from N. Hampshire.
Wm. Windom, Senator from Minnesota.
S. J. R. McMillan, ex-Chief Justice of Minn.
F. M. Cockrell, Senator from Missouri.
Lewis V. Bogy, Senator from Missouri.
George J. Ingalls, Senator from Kansas
J. M. Harney, ex-Governor of Kansas
H. S. Paddock, Senator from Nebraska.
H. F. Page, Senator from California.
J. H. Mitchell, Senator from Oregon.

Fine Business Prospects.

Mr. Lyon, the new publisher who has located in Easton, has secured nineteen agents the past week to represent his books in the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Mr. Lyon has personally shown his new work, "Our First Century," to a large number of our learned professors at the College and clergymen of the town, and in every case, so far, they have ordered a copy of the work for their own use. They have also given the highest testimonials in favor of its value. Without doubt Mr. Lyon is introducing a work superior to anything that has heretofore been issued from the American press.

From the Daily Free Press, May 1st.

Our First Century.

The following are a few of the notices that Mr. Lyon has received for his new work, "Our First Century." A number of these men state that they have never subscribed for or recommended any subscription book before. Mr. Lyon also states that every man who has examined the sample so far has ordered a copy for his own use. We are proud that a book of such substantial and permanent value should be issued from our town:

Easton, April 25, 1876.

The account of the visit of Lafayette to this country, in 1824, is of special interest to us at the College. This article alone has been a sufficient inducement for me to subscribe for the work.

W. C. Cattell,
President Lafayette College,
Easton, Pa.

"Our First Century" is a book I shall be glad to see in our College Library.

F. A. March, LL. D.,
Professor Lafayette College.

I am pleased with the great variety of popular subjects which are presented in the history of "Our First Century." They will prove interesting to all who seek to become familiar with the great events which have occurred during the past 100 years not found in ordinary history.

Traill Green, M. D., LL. D.,
Professor Lafayette College.

This novel and voluminous work in total contrast with the hasty and crude Centennials of the day, is an elaborate and studied record in separate chapters of the memorable incidents, phenomena, discoveries, inventions, and achievements, political, naval, and military, of the first century of our National history. This grand Centennial volume, the completion of the labor of many years, is an honor alike to the occasion, the author and the publishers, commercially a fortunate hit, doubtless securing an extensive sale.

Lyman Coleman, D. D.,
Professor Lafayette College.

The plan of this work strikes me as a novel one, and, if executed in the style promised by the specimen exhibited, will prove a valuable contribution to popular literature.

Thos. C. Porter, D. D.,
Professor Lafayette College.

This book invites and rewards perusal both by the new and happy conception of grouping together in one volume the most striking events in our National history, and by the fidelity and success with which the plan has been carried out in this work.

A. Ballard, D. D.,
Professor Lafayette College.

The plan of "Our First Century" embraces so many novel and interesting features that it is hard to particularize the excellencies of the work, but in its vivid portrayal of striking natural phenomena a new field has been entered successfully and beautifully, and these great occurrences in nature have been described in a manner as simple and attractive as it is accurate.

Selden J. Coffin, A. M.,
Professor Lafayette College.

Rev. C. H. Edgar, D. D., was the first among the pastors of Easton to subscribe for "Our First Century."

"Our First Century" presents in a convenient space those particular events of our natural history best fitted to interest and instruct the popular mind, it gives evidence of the years of labor and care bestowed upon it, and can hardly fail to profit and fully satisfy all who possess themselves of it.

Rev. H. W. McKnight,
Pastor St. Paul's Lutheran Church,
Easton.

After deliberate examination I subscribe for "Our First Century," and commend the book as comprehensive in plan and admirable in elocution.

Frank E. Miller,
Pastor Presbyterian Church,
Easton, Pa.

Popular and well fitted to fix attention upon the principal events of the century.

Rev. Jacob Weidman,
Pastor Brainerd Pres. Church,
Easton, Pa.

I have given "Our First Century" a careful examination, and wish to express my satisfaction and delight with its contents and arrangements. It is every way worthy, and I have no doubt will receive a hearty welcome from our book-loving people. Such a book is always a blessing in the household. May your success be in proportion to your labor and expense.

Rev. Wm. L. Gray,
Pastor Methodist Episcopal Church,
Easton, Pa.

After having examined the specimen of "Our First Century," I decidedly join in the above testimonials to its very interesting and instructive character.

Rev. John Beck, D. D.,
Pastor Third-street Reformed Church,
Easton, Pa.

I have no doubt that the book, "Our First Century," is in every particular as represented, and that all purchasers will find themselves abundantly rewarded.

Rev. J. R. Groff,
Pastor Lutheran Church,
Easton, Pa.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF "OUR FIRST CENTURY."

From the Daily Free Press, May 9, 1876.

A Successful Work.

Mr. Lyon informs us that his agents for "Our First Century" are meeting with wonderful success, every agent reporting good sales. The following are a few of the opinions of our public men in regard to it, a number of them having been personally connected with events described in the book:

General Sherman, General of the Army of the United States, says:—Put my name down for a copy."

Hon. M. R. Waite, Chief Justice of the United States, says:—"It interests me very much. I subscribe with pleasure."

Judge I. P. Christiancy, of Michigan, says:—"The book speaks for itself, as one of undoubted merit."

Senator Ferry, of Michigan, Vice President, pro tem. says—"The peculiar idea of the work, so entertaining and instructive, impresses me very favorably."

Judge Howe, Senator from Wisconsin, says:—Evidently prepared with much labor."

Hon G. G. Wright, Ex-Chief Justice of Iowa, says:—"I depart from my fixed rule, in subscribing for the book."

Hon. W. B. Allison, Senator from Iowa, says:—"I like it very much—shall buy the book."

Hon. S. J. R. McMillan, late Chief Justice of Minnesota, says: "Excellent, and of unusual interest and value. I will readily and with great pleasure recommend it."

Hon. Wm. Windom, Senator from Minnesota, says:—In any way in my power, I will cheerfully aid the work in my region."

Hon. John J. Ingalls, Senator from Kansas, says:—"— most attractive presentation, as it appears to me, of the Wonderful Occurrences in our Nation's First Century."

Hon. Powell Clayton, Ex Governor of Arkansas, says:—"Every one should have a copy."

Hon. Simon Cameron, Senator from Pennsylvania, says:—"The arrangement is in the highest degree adapted to meet the public wants, and I am exceedingly pleased with it. I by all means desire a copy."

Hon. Wm A. Wallace, Senator from Pennsylvania, says:—"Very appropriate and popular in its character."

Hon. S. B. Conover, senator from Florida, says:—'The fine execution of the work surprises me.'

Hon. F. M. Cockrell, Senator from Missouri, says:—"Am highly pleased with the admirable scope of its pages."

Hon Francis Thomas, late Governor of Maryland, says:—"The design is, beyond any doubt, most admirably conceived, and when published it must simply be necessary to exhibit such a work to insure its sale."

Hon. J. H. Mitchell, senator, from Oregon, says:—"My practice is not to sign for works in advance, but I will for this."

Hon. E. Saulsbury, Senator from Delaware, says:—"A valuable work, unquestionably."

Ex-Gov. Morrill, Senator from Maine, says:—"A specially good design; am happy to patronize the undertaking."

Judge Edmunds, Senator from Vermont, says:—Must have an immense sale."

Hon. Wm. W. Eaton, Senator from Connecticut, says:—"It is really a remarkable book."

Hon. J. S. Morrill, Senator from Vermont, says:—"The execution shows great industry and application."

Hon. H. L. Dawes, Senator from Massachusetts says:—"Have been truly gratified in looking over such a remarkable volume."

Hon. Francis Kernan, Senator from New York, says:—"Interesting, and I believe multitudes will buy it. I will gladly aid you in its introduction in my locality."

Hon O. S. Ferry, late Senator from Connecticut, says:—"The idea of your proposed volume could not, in my opinion, be bettered, and the enthusiasm of the approaching Centennial year must enlist for it unusual interest and deserved favor."

Ex-Gov. Banks, M. C. from Massachusetts, says:—"It is grand. It is the really true way of presenting history."

Hon. Henry L. Pierce, M. C. from Massachusetts, says:—"Good for popular circulation."

Ex-Gov. Boutwell, Senator from Massachusetts, says:—The preparation of the work evinces a great amount of labor."

The above are a few samples of the many recommendations the work has elicited.

"The work entitled "Our First Century" presents the most memorable events that have occurred in our country's history during the one hundred years of our existence as a nation. The plan is attractive and entirely new, and from a careful examination appears to be well executed and admirably adapted to interest and instruct, and cannot fail to be highly prized by those who select the volume for the family library, as I have done."

Richard H. Steele, D. D.,
Pastor 1st Ref. Church,
New Brunswick, N. J.

"The volume commended by Dr. Steele seems to me worthy of a large patronage, and merits the decided opinion he has expressed of the value of such a work."

John Woodbridge, D. D.,
Pastor 2d Presbyterian Church,
June 8, 1876. New Brunswick, N. J.

"I am glad to add my word of praise to the other commendations."

C D Hartranft,
Pastor 2d Ref. Church,
New Brunswick.

"I have examined the specimen pages of "Our First Century," which is a popular description of one hundred great and memorable events. The character of the typography, well executed engravings, and condensed description of the events and circumstances recorded commend it to all, not only for reference, but as a valuable addition to the library; whilst not the least of the many inducements connected with it is the very moderate price at which it is offered. It well deserves an extensive circulation."

Edward Wilson,
New Brunswick, N. J.,
Pastor of the State Grange.

"I have looked with care and interest at the plan of Mr. Deven's work. It is not a continuous history, but contains a selection of remarkable events, discoveries, &c., each one of which is treated more fully than in any ordinary history. So far as I can judge from the specimen pages the work will be well done and will be worthy a place in every library."

David Demarest, D. D.,
Prof. Theol. Seminary,
June 7, 1876. New Brunswick, N. J.

"I have examined the specimen pages of the work exhibiting the remarkable events of Our First Century. I concur fully in the commendations given by Dr. Steele, of New Brunswick, and Rev. E. Wilson."

Edward Lord,
Metuchen, N. J., June 7, 1876.

"I have looked over the specimen pages of "Our First Century," published by J. W. Lyon, of Easton, Pa., and written by R. M. Devens, and I have great confidence in recommending it as a work that is likely to be both popular and useful. Without being either a history or encyclopedia, it contains many of the useful features of both. The topics treated are of such wide variety and interest as to furnish something instructive and suggestive to almost every class of readers."

G. H. Atherton,
Rutgers College, New Brunswick.

"From a hasty examination of "Our First Century" I am convinced that it is a work of superior merit. In the general plan and mechanical execution of the work and the selection of the subjects it is all that can be desired."

E. Dietrich,
County Supt. Public Instruction,
June 8, 1876. Warren County, N. J.

I am pleased with the general plan of "Our First Century," the selection of subjects, and literary execution of it. I think it will be useful and reliable. For these reasons I have subscribed for it.

F. A. Muhlenberg,
President Muhlenburg College,
Allentown, Pa.

An excellent work. It cannot fail to enrich those who read it with a wealth of our Nation's history.

Saml. E. Webster,
Pastor of 1st Presbyterian Church,
Washington, N. J.

I have carefully examined this work and pronounce it the most complete and valuable of the Centennial Volumes I have seen. It is written after a new and most comprehensive plan.

George H. Whitney, D. D.,
Prest. Collegiate Institute,
Hackettstown, N. J.

"I positively declined to subscribe for any book the agent, Mr. Wm. Ogg, could offer, and with reluctance examined the specimen pages of "Our First Century." I am convinced that it is full of information, which I need in the study, and of perpetual and pleasing interest to every member of my family. Strange to relate I subscribed for a copy."

Chas. E. Little, D. D.,
Pastor M. E Church,
Hackettstown, N. J.

The fact of my having subscribed for the work is sufficient evidence that I consider "Our First Century" a convenient compilation of the events that have taken place during the first century of the American Republic.

Levi Johnson,
Pastor of Episcopal Church.
Hackettstown, N. J.

From my examination of this work I am sufficiently pleased to subscribe for it, and thus commend it as a rich treasury of valuable information.

Thos. McCauley,
Hackettstown, N. J.

I have examined the specimen and plan of "Our First Century." As a veritable history of interesting events in the rise and progress of "The Great Republic" it should be in the library of every household in the land, and be handed down to succeeding generations, as a valuable book of instruction and reference.

Charles Sitgreaves, Ex. M. C.,
Phillipsburg, N. J.

From the brief examination I have been able to give "Our First Century," I feel assured that it will be an invaluable compendium of events that must have an abiding influence and interest, for all who love to trace the steps by which the country has reached its present position of proud pre-eminence.

Pastor of St. Bernard's Church, R. C.,

REST.

My feet are wearied and my hands are tired—
My soul oppressed—
And with desire have I long desired
Rest—only rest.

'Tis hard to toil—when toil is almost vain—
In barren ways;
'Tis hard to sow and never garner grain
In harvest days.

The burden of my day is hard to bear—
But God knows best;
And I have prayed, but vain has been my prayer
For rest—sweet rest.

'Tis hard to plant in spring and never reap
The autumn yield;
'Tis hard to till—and when 'tis tilled to weep
O'er fruitless field.

And so I cry a weak and human cry,
So heart oppressed;
And so I sigh a weak and human sigh
For rest—for rest.

My way has wound across the desert years,
And cares infest
My path; and through the flowing of hot tears
I pined for rest.

'Twas always so; when still a child, I laid
On mother's breast
My wearied little head; e'en then I prayed,
As now, for rest.

And I am restless still. 'Twill soon be o'er;
For, down the west
Life's sun is setting, and I see the shore
Where I shall rest.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

A GREAT FOOL.

His name was John Holt; and, moreover, he looked like his name, or like the image which the sound of his name, in a musical ear, would call up in the mind. For John should be strong, and quiet, and true, and grave, and John Holt was all of these. His skin was fair and his eyes blue, but the hair, which had been tow colored in his childhood, had deepened to brown. Ordinary persons would call him good looking, rather than handsome, but a close observer would pronounce his profile perfect, and his mouth and chin models of firm and symmetrical chiseling. The brows were straight and strong, though smooth, and his not very high forehead was broad and open.

John Holt's characteristics were a womanish gentleness, a most marvelous and absurd honesty, and a patience which, to them, looked only too much like cowardice. In his family John was called a great fool.

John's father had died when the lad was but ten years old, and left his wife to bring up her family of five children and manage the farm. She was perfectly capable of doing it, and even wary business men were on their guard when making a bargain with the sharp Yankee matron. Four of her children followed in her footsteps, and knew perfectly well which was the best end of the bargain; but John—well, if he was a fool it was not because she had not warned and talked to him.

John did not grow wiser as he grew older, and took upon himself the cares of life. Mrs. Holt had a large and valuable farm just on the borders of the town. Streets had crept gradually about her fields, and surrounded them on three sides; on the fourth woodlands stretched back toward the east. Why she should give the control of this place to John, instead of one of his sharper brothers, was a puzzle even to her own mind. The only reason she could give was that John was steady and quiet, and more likely to remain home than the others were. But she confessed to herself to be in continual tribulation with him.

"My dear," she said, to a crony, "you know that fifty cords of wood we had good beech, birch and maple, with not more than twenty sticks of spruce through the whole? Well, John must mention that stoveful of spruce, and so lose five dollars on the bargain. I never did see such a fool. Then he wanted to hurry off our potatoes last fall for fear of rot. I told John particularly not to own to a speck; but if you will believe it, when Thurlow came to buy them, and asked if we had seen any signs of rot, that ninny said: 'Yes, a little,' though I vow I don't believe there were six spots larger than the head of a pin in the whole lot. I don't know where the fellow got his shiftlessness. I'm sure I could always make a bargain."

John took all this very quietly, as we have said. He knew that though his mother would say such things to others, she would by no means have allowed any one to say them to her. But one thing he could not bear was that Nellie Cramer should talk in the same way. Nellie seemed to delight in tormenting him. She would follow him into the gardens and fields, hang on his arm with her curls blowing across his breast, looking up smiling and chatting into his face, so soft and sweet as a kitten; then suddenly, if he chanced to press those wandering curls against his breast, or to bend too near her lovely upturned face, or to breath a word of tenderness, off she went with a toss of the head and a curl of the lip, and as likely as not some such speech as: "I do wish you would not be so foolish, John Holt!"

He never got angry with her. How could he? Out sometimes a shadow would drop

John Holt was tanned that summer, but through the brownness one might have seen a faint blush run over his face. Nellie didn't see it, for she was looking down and rolling her apron tassels, a very bright color in her own face.

There was a moment's silence after this announcement, and seeing that he was expected to say something, John presently said "Yes."

Nellie gave her shoulders an impatient shrug, and looked up. "It's a very good offer," she went on. "I suppose you will guess from whom. It is James Lee. I told him I would think about it, and tell him my decision to-morrow. Now, he's very well off, you know, and when his father dies he will be rich. But then, of course, there's no hurry about that. But the trouble is this, James will live all his days in Riceville, I am positive; and that is dreadful. You know I want to live in a city, and want my husband to make a figure in the world. And James, why, James is almost as much of a deacon as you are."

"You are complimentary," observed John Holt, with a certain quiet dignity. The blush had quite gone from his face, and some of the brownness seemed to have gone, too; for he looked slightly pale.

"Oh, I don't mean any harm, you cross fellow," Nellie said, hastily. "You know I think you are splendid."

"I am much obliged to you," he said, with a stiffness which was quite new to his manner.

"Oh, if you don't want to advise me, I won't trouble you, the girl flung out rising in a pet.

"Come back, Nelly," he said, kindly; "I am not cross. Only tell me what you want."

She seated herself again with a little quiver in her lip.

"I want you to tell me what you think of James Lee. Tell me if you think I'd better marry him. Tell me if you think he cares enough for me to go just where I say, and live where I wish."

The color waved again in John Holt's face, and he drew a quick breath. Some impulse to speak seemed to come upon him. Glancing up for his answer, Nellie saw the change, and added a word:

"You see, John, I like Albert Leighton better than I do James."

The color and light dropped out of his face again, and a rim of even white teeth pressed for an instant his under lip.

"Then why don't you marry Albert Leighton?" he asked, looking up into the tree that spread over his head, and reaching to break a slender twig.

"He never asked me to," she answered, demurely.

"I suppose he means to, doesn't he?" asked John, looking at her with a glance that might be called almost haughty.

"How can I tell?" Nellie pouted. "Men are so queer. The most of them would rather wait to be asked, I think."

"If you want my advice, I will give it," John said, twisting and flinging away the little twig in his hand. "If you like Albert, don't keep James in suspense. You have no right to do it. You can't seriously think of marrying one man when you prefer another. If Albert likes you, as I believe he does, take him. He's a good fellow."

"You think so?" the girl said, looking up suddenly.

"I think so," he repeated, turning away. "Now let's go up to the house."

She rose and walked quietly by his side, her fair, girlish face a little pale, her eyes downcast. At the gate she stopped.

"I will not go in now," she said, in a low tone. "I will go home."

He merely bowed, and looking back after a few steps, she saw that he had not entered the house, but was stealing off toward the barn.

The next week James Lee commenced a violent flirtation with Bessie Holt, John's sister, and in a month the two were engaged. Nellie laughed, and turned the light of her smiles upon Albert Leighton, a handsome, dashy fellow, who had been crazy about Lee for the last six months. John Holt said nothing, but was rather cool about his sister's engagement.

"You see, suspense would have killed him," Nellie whispered, mischievously.

"I hope he isn't marrying my sister out of pique toward you," John said, coldly. "If I didn't think Bessie loved him too well to give him up, I would tell her."

"And betray my confidence, John Holt," Nellie exclaimed. "I tell you, he is like most of you men—purely selfish. He didn't care a fig about me. I think he seems to like Bessie."

"When are you going to be married?" he asked, abruptly.

The question came so suddenly that for once the girl lost her composure. A crimson blush swept over her face, and she dropped her eyes without being able to speak a word.

She recovered herself in a minute, and protested that she had no thought of marrying. But the blush had convicted her in John Holt's eyes, and he scarcely heard a word that she said.

It was winter, and while they talked they were waiting, with half a dozen others, for a large sleigh that was coming to take them stood like a rock against which expostulation beat itself to spray. He gave good reasons, and resolutely maintained his right to choose for himself.

"You have always said, mother, that you wished I were more venturesome," he said. "I am going to please you, now."

"But how is the farm to get along without you?" she objected.

"Frank understands everything, and can manage."

Mrs. Holt took courage, and, breaking over some little awe which, in spite of her talk, she felt for her son, spoke out:

"John, has that Nell Cramer jilted you?"

"Jilted me!" he said, flushing as much with anger as with surprise. "What do you mean, mother? We have always been good friends, but never any more. I never gave her the chance to jilt me."

"Then why don't you give her the chance?" persisted his mother, who did not choose to give up, now that the ice was broken. "Nell is a good girl, if she does flirt a little. I always thought that she liked you, only that you were too slow to see it. Then, Nell has got a little sum of money of her own that wouldn't be amiss."

"You are entirely mistaken, mother," he said, decisively. "Don't let us say any more about it."

"Oh, you great fool!" muttered the mother, looking after him as he went out. "Was there ever a man so blind! He is no more fit to live in the world than an angel out of heaven is."

The girl came in, wondering at such a peremptory summons.

"Come and sit by me!" commanded the matron, and Nellie obeyed.

Mrs. Holt scanned her from head to foot, the neat, trim figure in its snugly fitting paletot of dark gray, the green bonnet, that brought out her fresh, clear color, with a new luster, and the fair, bright face.

"Did you know that our John is going to California?" asked Mrs. Holt, abruptly, her keen eyes on the girl's face.

All the color faded out of it in an instant, and Nellie Cramer dropped into a chair as suddenly as if she had been shot. She sat there and looked at the other with her strained eyes, but said nothing.

"Yes," said Mrs. Holt, unable to repress a slight smile of satisfaction at this proof of the correctness of her surmise; "yes, he's set on going in spite of all I can say. He is going in a month or six weeks. Let me see; the middle of April. He says he shall start by the first of June, at furthest."

That smile of Mrs. Holt's was an unfortunate one. Nellie had always feared those sharp eyes, and now the thought flashed into her mind that John's mother was trying to expose and mortify her. A woman's pride will do a good deal for her, even when her heart is breaking. It brought the color to her face again, and strengthened her trembling limbs. It steadied her voice and her eyes. Mrs. Holt was puzzled and disconcerted by the sudden change.

"I am so sorry!" Nellie said, in a tone of fearless regret. "We can scarcely get along without John. He seems such a standby. But men ought not to be tied at home, I think. If they chose to go, they should be allowed their own way. There he is now in the garden. I am going out to speak to him of it."

"Try to coax him to stay, Nellie," said the mother, in a tone of more entreaty than, perhaps, she had ever used in her life before. "He is a good son, and I can't get along without him. I think you can keep him if you will."

This prayer would have been effectual, but for the memory of that smile which rankled in the girl's heart. Had she not given John Holt every encouragement, if he had cared about her? Had she not said and done things so affectionate toward him that she had blushed with shame thinking of them afterward? John was no fool, and if he had cared for her he might have understood. He had probably been trying to put her back.

With these thoughts burning in her heart, Nellie Cramer went directly to John Holt as he walked up and down the garden. He stopped, seeing her, and looked wistfully into her face. Though he had denied his mother so decidedly, her words had not been without weight. Women understood each other. Could it be possible? and there was Nellie coming down the walk. Her head was erect, and her face perfectly composed, though slightly pale.

"I am so sorry," she begun. "Your mother has been telling me of your plans. Of course, you know best what is good for you, and I have been telling her to let you have your own way. But we shall all be sorry to lose you, John."

That was all. He gave a last grasp at his self-command, and held it. There was a short, formal conversation, both so engaged in making a pretense of being kind and friendly, and just as usual, that each could not perceive that the other was also making a pretense; and four weeks after they parted John Holt went to California.

He stayed there five years, and sent his mother her gold spoon. He stayed three years longer, and then came home himself.

John Holt smoothed her hair tenderly, for one moment of silence; then exclaimed, as though some great truth had suddenly dawned upon him,

"I deserved it! I always thought them wrong, but they were right. I was, indeed, a great fool!"

* * *

A GIRL'S FIRST LOVER.

Others may come after him—others usually do come after him, for seldom is it that a girl marries her first love—but to none does she ever attach that strange intangible interest, sacred with never expressed pathos, which attaches to her first sweet-heart. Her memory of him is like the faint, delicate perfume which still clings about that first wild rose of summer that he gave her during the first tete-a-tete walk that they ever took together in the woods. How well she remembers it all! It was the first summer after she left school. It was a little out-of-the way summer resort where she was staying with a party of friends, and where he chanced to come too, and, after meeting her, lingered.

She was a little flattered to find herself walking alone with him, quite by accident of course, and both tried to keep a lively and natural conversation, and as a consequence it was perfectly absurd, somewhat constrained altogether fragmentary.

Then he saw this rose, the only one upon a bush full of buds that grew close to the moss-grown trunk of a fallen tree just over the source of a tiny stream of water that wound, like a tangled thread, in and out among the trees. He gathered and gave it to her with a half-shy, half-looking look—so transparently conscious in its endeavor to be unconscious! and with a remark intended to be sprightly.

And she took it, between a blush and a smile, and with a swift up look from eyes that were busily playing hide-and-seek under the becoming shelter of long lashes.

She tucked it in at the waistband of her dress, just as she would have done any other rose, but how careful she was not by any sudden movement to deflower it of its simple circlet of pale pink leaves!

He does not know—he will never know—that as soon as she was alone in her room with the door locked, she drew it carefully from her belt and kissed it daintily, though with repressed passion, before she exalted it to the position of honor in her pet vase, a bit of bijouterie. just big enough to hold this one flower fitly, and in honor of it filled carefully with clear cold water with her own pretty fresh fingers, as rosily tipped as those of Aurora in the act of drawing aside the curtains of the dawn.

What was the unspoken compact between them that caused her, standing before her glass in her simple white dress that same evening, to pose the flowers shyly among the burnished waves of her hair!

Will she ever forget how his eyes thanked her? Will she ever forget the night on which she wore it? Was there ever another night like that? Will there be ever again?

For her: no. For every girl who has yet to meet her first lover: yes. There will be just one such for each girl, but never another.

Was it the earth she trod on? How beautiful everything was! As if the world was just new made! The lights, the music, the gay chatter, bright smiles, ringing laughter! And when she danced with him she seemed to have wings to her feet. Then at last they were alone together in the cool, fragrant dewy darkness outside, and to be together, to be arm in arm, to hear each other's voices, that was all they cared for. There was no other world for them that night. They were separated from our common earth by such a swift-flowing tide of deep but unspoken delight. Unspoken because young affection is too sacred for words. First love is born dumb, and learns speech but slowly. Deep down in each heart was the rapturous consciousness of loving and being beloved by the other, which is worth a lifetime of "I love you?"

It brimmed each heart with a sufficing delight, even as a flower cup is brimmed with dew. The sun will drink the dew up by and by, even as the world will dry up this fountain of innocent gladness. But the dew has been in the flower cup and in the girl's heart. First love, whose memory never departs.

The wild rose in her hair was withered when she again stood before her glass, with flushed cheeks and a new brightness in her eyes. But she laid it as carefully as a young mother might lay her first-born in its cradle—between two pages of Tennyson, upon a poem that he had read to her the day before. It rests there still.

To a careless observer, what matters a worn copy of Tennyson with a withered wild rose pressed between its leaves?

But to her it is all that is left, may be, of the purest and tenderest romance of a girl's life; it is the first gift of her first lover!

SMALL PLUNDER.

It is the duty of an official, high or low, to be as honest in the handling of the public money as though it were his own personal property. He is an unfaithful servant of the people if he does otherwise, whether through criminal design or indolent neglect.

Our charge against Grantism at the present writing is embodied in a small item, which, though small, is nevertheless important, because it represents a corrupt system now tainting the whole conduct of national affairs.

The Secretary of the Navy, instead of publicly and honestly inviting proposals for sale and purchase, privately contracted with a favored party for over four million pounds of beam and frame iron at 8 cents per pound, giving in exchange on account of payment old iron at 1½ cents per pound.

When that transaction, with a mass of others of like disreputable character, was reported by the Committee of Investigation to the House, Mr. Hewitt, of New York, of the well-known and responsible firm of Cooper, Hewitt & Co., extensive iron makers and thoroughly posted in the business, arose in his place and declared that at the time of such secret negotiation, the price of beam and frame iron, cut to lengths and dimensions as required, did not exceed 4½ cents per pound, at which the Government could have been supplied, and that old iron was worth 1½ cents per pound cash in the market.

The foregoing was a small piece of plunder, we admit, only about eighteen thousand dollars snatched from the public treasury, but it was plunder, and one of the myriad rivulets that have swollen the expenditures of Government into a vast ocean of fraud.

Continued pilfering and profligacy will ruin any country.

Justly do honest and impartial citizens cry—Give us a change! Give us Reform! Of Grantism we are sick!—Hayesism will be the same thing under another name! That and nothing better.

Only $18,000 stolen! A very small steal, yet, be it remembered, such thousands have made many millions.

THE NAVY.

The Committee on Naval Affairs of the Federal House of Representatives, in their thorough investigation of that branch of the public service, brought to light a startling array of fraud and wastefulness. Millions upon millions of the people's money have been squandered as Naval expenses during the past seven years, without any valuable equivalent to show for the outlay.

Our Navy has cost in proportion to its size far more than that of any other nation on the face of the globe, and it is to-day practically worthless to compete with a foreign foe. Weaker even than the Spanish.

Admiral Porter knows as much about Naval matters as any other living American. Hear what he told the Committee. It was this:

"I need scarcely say that the officers of the navy who expect to take part in any conflict that may arise between our country and a foreign power look with anxiety for an improvement in our ships, more particularly since the West India drill made it apparent to the youngest of them that our combined force of vessels was incapable of a successful encounter with a fleet one-fourth as large built on modern principles. Indeed, one such ship as the British iron-clad Invincible ought to go through a fleet like ours and put the vessels hors de combat in a short time, for she could run them down or destroy them at long range with her heavy rifle guns."

Is not that humiliating? Is it not an outrage upon the people of the United States?

One English iron-clad capable of sinking the entire American Navy.

What has gone with the hundred and seventy million dollars expended by the present Secretary of the Navy?

Who pocketed the money?

These are questions the people want answered. They demand facts, not malignant personal slanders upon Democratic candidates.

And furthermore, they demand REFORM.

THE BLOODY SHIRT RENT IN TWAIN.

Senator Boutwell, of Massachusetts, the great ex-financier, and the astute statesman who once spoke eloquently about "a hole in the sky," near the close of the recent session of Congress made a garbled and untruthful report concerning political affairs in the State of Mississippi.

That was Boutwell waving the bloody shirt.

President Grant, drawing inspiration from him or some other evil genius, echoed the falsity by writing to Governor Chamberlain, of South Carolina, under date of July 26th last, the following words:

"Mississippi is governed to-day by officials chosen through fraud and violence, such as would scarcely be accredited to savages, much less to a civilized and Christian people."

That was Grant trying his hand at the bloody shirt business.

Now let us have the truth.

Here it is, in a letter to the President of the United States, and penned in Mississippi immediately after the election which that high functionary, fired by partisan hate, or some other kind of bad spirit, eight months later insultingly declared was the work of "fraud and violence."

Read the letter!

HOLLY SPRINGS, November 7, 1875.

To His Excellency U. S. Grant, President of the United States:

MY DEAR SIR:

In view of the results of the recent election in our State, I have determined to write you a letter canvassing the situation and giving my views thereon. I will premise by saying that I am no politician, though having been honored by a seat in the United States Senate. I never have sought political preferment nor do I ask it now, but am engaged in my calling (the ministry), and feeling an earnest desire for the welfare of all the people, irrespective of race or color, I have deemed it advisable to submit to you, for consideration, a few thoughts in regard to the political situation in this State. Since reconstruction the masses of my people have been, as it were, enslaved in mind by unprincipled adventurers who, caring nothing for the country, were willing to stoop to anything, no matter how infamous, to secure power to themselves and perpetuate it. My people are naturally Republicans, but as they grow older in freedom so do they in wisdom. A great portion of them have learned that they were being used as mere tools, and, as in the late election, not being able to correct the existing evil among themselves, they determined, by casting their ballots against these unprincipled adventurers, to overthrow them. My people have been told by these schemers, when men were placed upon the ticket who were notoriously corrupt and dishonest, that they must vote for them; that the salvation of the party depended upon it; that the man who scratched a ticket was not a Republican. This is only one of the many means these malignant demagogues have devised to perpetuate the intellectual bondage of my people. To defeat this policy at the late election, men, irrespective of race or party affiliation, united and voted together against men known to be incompetent and dishonest.

I cannot recognize, nor do the masses of my people who read recognize, the majority of the officials who have been in power the past two years as Republicans. We do not believe that Republicanism means corruption, theft and embezzlement. These three offences have been prevalent among the great portion of our office-holders. To them must be attributed the defeat of the Republican party in the State, if defeat there was, but I, with all the lights before me, look upon it as an uprising of the people, the whole people, to crush out corrupt rings and men from power. The bitterness and hate created by the late civil strife have, in my opinion, been obliterated in this State, except, perhaps, in some localities, and would have long since been entirely effaced were it not for some unprincipled men who would keep alive the bitterness of the past and inculcate a hatred between the races, in order that they may aggrandize themselves by office and its emoluments to control my people, the effect of which is to degrade them. I give you my opinion that had our State administration adhered to Republican principles and stood by the platform upon which it was elected, the State to-day would have been on the highway of prosperity. If the State administration had advanced only patriotic measures, appointed only honest men to office, and sought to restore confidence between the races, bloodshed would have been unknown, peace would have prevailed, Federal interference been unthought of, and harmony, friendship and mutual confidence would have taken the place of the bayonet. In conclusion, let me say to you, and through you to the great Republican party of the North, that I deem it my duty in behalf of my people that I present these facts, in order that they and the white people (their former owners) should not suffer misrepresentation which certain demagogues seem desirous of encouraging. Respectfully,

H. W. REVELS.

There is the truth and it stands in direct opposition to the utterances of Grantism.

Who is Mr. Revels?

He is a colored Republican, ex-Senator of the United States, and now a worthy Christian Minister among the colored people of Mississippi.

He was in the State during the entire canvass and on the day of election, and knew personally all the facts of the case. His testimony, clearly and boldly presented, is this:—

The State of Mississippi went Democratic, because colored voters united with the whites to put down men known to be incompetent and dishonest.

That was what did it.

The same independent honesty throughout the whole Union will elect Tilden and Hendricks.

The bloody shirt is worn out.

PRIMARIES.

In our issue of this week will be found the call of the County Executive Committee to the various Wards and Townships, to elect delegates to the State and Congressional Conventions. The former will meet at Trenton on September the 12th, and the call for the latter will shortly be issued. We hope to be able to announce in our next, the election, not only in our City, but also throughout the County, of delegates who will reflect honor on the party and whose characters will convey assurances to the people that our professions of reform are sincere. Upon this issue we expect to fight the battle of November. We have selected as our standard-bearer, the representative reformer of our time, the man whose deeds in this direction, have proved that he is in earnest in his warfare against corruption and public wrong of every shape and color wherever it may be found, and by whatever name it may be known. It behooves the Democracy to extend the operations of this principle into every portion of its organization. In its primaries and in its conventions let such men only be selected as are known to be sterling and true, and upon whom the people can trustingly rely. Adopting this course, we will deserve and receive the confidence and support of the people.

WHEELER ON THE STUMP.

Mr. Wheeler, the Republican candidate for Vice President, has been letting off a speech in Vermont, and we hope the Washington Campaign Committee, or rather President Grant's salaried Secretary of the Interior, will permit his continuing on the stump.

Mr. Wheeler commenced his oration by declaring that he was made a candidate for the Vice Presidency by the States of Vermont and Massachusetts.

Now, that is something we were not prepared to hear, and it would sound quite appropriate did Mr. Wheeler belong to either of those Commonwealths, but, claiming as he does citizenship with the great State of New York, the assertion certainly damages the candidate's good standing at home. Vermont and Massachusetts, not New York, his own State, placed Mr. Wheeler's name on the ticket, and why? Mark the reason, Jerseymen!

Because, as he further declared, "the Republicans of those States deemed him sufficiently grounded in the Plymouth Rock faith to be one of the representatives of their ideas in the pending canvass."

That is an unfortunate claim to present for the suffrages of the people of the United States in this enlightened age. A representative of an idea that was in effect the concentrated essence of bigotry and persecution, that hung Quakers, whipped Baptists, cursed everybody and everything unfettered by its narrow minded creed, and throughout the whole range of endeavor and action, inflicted upon the land of its refuge civil and ecclesiastical tyranny of the bluest hue and foulest odor.

Having in the aforesaid speech avowed himself a political Puritan, Mr. Wheeler naturally jumped over the practical issues of the day—official integrity, public economy, sound currency and revived business prosperity, and frantically seizing Morton's crimson rag, shouted himself hoarse in vulgar and lying abuse of the people of the South, a conquered people, who twelve long years ago laid down arms, admitted defeat, honorably accepted the situation, who have since striven and are yet striving to repair shattered fortunes, and to live the peaceful lives of loyal members of a perpetual Union.

A gallant soldier will never insult a fallen foe. That only becomes cowardly malignant Puritanism.

One might reasonably suppose Mr. Wheeler had been secluded as a hermit in the mountains, and coming forth at this late day thought the war between Northern and Southern sections of our country still raged. It was not ignorance, however, that swayed the candidate of Vermont and Massachusetts, but that detestable spirit of bitter hate and cruel revenge which he has publicly proclaimed to be an honor to represent.

SEYMOUR FOR GOVERNOR.

Nothing has given us greater satisfaction recently in matters political than the information received this morning of the nomination at Saratoga yesterday of Horatio Seymour as the Gubernatorial candidate of the Democratic party of the State of New York.

Speculations were rife as to his acceptance, but they have been set at rest by the announcement received by us per telegraph this noon, that he has consented to the use of his name for that purpose.

This will be hailed with joy all over the Union, and as, we believe, will render certain the result in the great State, which we are convinced is to decide the Presidential contest in November.

Let our best men, everywhere, be brought forward and the cause of the people will prevail.

4TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

The Democrats of the Fourth Congressional District met in convention today, (Thursday) at Washington, N. J., and nominated ALVAH A. CLARK, of Somerset for Congress in that district. Mr. Clark is a lawyer of prominence in Somerville. Good for Somerset. She was entitled to the nomination, has got it, and Mr. Clark of course will be elected. He is an excellent man for the position and will reflect honor upon his party and constituents in his official capacity.

NEW JERSEY ELECTORAL CONVENTIONS.

At New Brunswick, N. J., yesterday, the Republican State Electoral Convention elected Messrs. McCarter and Newell electors-at-large. District electors were chosen as follows; First, James H. Nixon, of Cumberland, ex-State Senator; Second, Judge Joseph Carr; Third, ex-State Senator J. Henry Stone, of Union; Fourth, David Thompson, of Sussex; Fifth, Benjamin Buckley, Mayor of Paterson; Sixth, John L. Blake, of Orange; Seventh, Charles Seidler, Mayor of Jersey City.

Plainfield is to be known hereafter as the banner city of Republicanism. Last Wednesday the Hayes & Wheeler Legion of this city, with drum and fife, to the number of 28, went to New Brunswick in carriages to participate in the Grand Demonstration announced to take place there on the occasion of the Republican State Convention to nominate presidential electors. It was anticipated that there would be a grand torch-light procession in the evening, but alas! the "Legion" from Plainfield, 28 strong, was the only organization of the kind there, and so the boys had to parade all alone. Plainfield therefore should be accorded the honor of turning out the first body of torch-bearers in the campaign in this State. All hail Plainfield! Great is her glory and the numbers of her "Legion!"

The strenuous efforts now being made by the leaders of the Republican party in Maine, Vermont and Massachusetts, into which States they are sending their best speakers is particularly noticeable. These States have always been considered reliable by that party. It certainly looks as if they were fearful that even in these strongholds the success of the legitimate heir of Grant is doubtful and Republican supremacy in danger. When they find it necessary to patrol their own camp to keep their followers from desertion; when they distrust the fidelity of those who have hitherto never wavered; when the household of the faithful is itself suspected, we may be well assured, that, notwithstanding all their show and bravado they see the hand-writing on the wall and tremble.

The reports from the frontier indi*cates that the campaign against the* Sioux is virtually at an end, and that for the present Custer is to be unavenged. The Indians have drawn off, and the United States troops will immediately look about them for winter quarters. A despatch to the Chicago Times, dated near the mouth of the Yellowstone, August 20th, says that on August 14th our troops found, near the Big Horn Mountains, a trail four or five days old and two miles wide, being the heaviest ever seen on the prairies. The trail finally separated, and the Indians were found to be in full retreat, one band heading North, and the other, so the despatch says, "going South along the Little Missouri, for the purpose of crossing the Missouri above Fort Berthold." Thus the summer's campaign in this new Indian war ends in nothing and worse than nothing, for while the savages have escaped, a band of troops have been slaughtered and a vast expense incurred. And all because the troops that might have been employed in the prosecution of an effective campaign against the Sioux have been kept away to do political campaigning for the Republican party.

We recollect how, a few months ago, all the small-beer poets in the land aided and abetted by that peculiar specimen of political consistency, the New York Herald, were distressing their brains, and all in vain, to find a rhyme for Conklin. It may be seen by the prophetic effusion below, that the name of Tilden does not present the same difficulty:

From Now Till November.
Captain Hayes he's on the march,
And so is Captain Tilden;
But 'tis quite plain Hayes nothing knows
Of th' arts brave men are drilled in'

After November.
Captain Hayes he took a boat,
To row with Captain Tilden—
The wind it blew, the waters rose,
And Captain Hayes was spilled in!

A Century Hence.
A glorious year was seventy-six—
Famed for Reform and Tilden!
And noted, too, as that same year
Our Captain Hayes was grilled in!

If Grantism is to be uprooted and destroyed, under an Administration with Hayes as its figurehead, why is it that Grant is doing all he can to forcibly prevent the election of another man?

EXIT COL. BARCALOW.

Under a recent act of Congress, the President has ordered the consolidation of the Third and Fifth Internal Revenue Districts of New Jersey, to take effect on the 1st day of September. Robert B. Hathorne, of Newark, has been retained as Collector, and Culver Barcalow retires from office.

GEN. McCLELLAN ON TILDEN.

General George B. McClellan has written an able letter, in which he discusses the issues of the presidental contest, and says:

In Mr. Tilden I am confident that we have a candidate possessing all the requisite that the exigencies of the times demand. In a long career he has given the surest proofs of ability and integrity. It is a very easy thing to preach reform to an opponent, but a very different affair to carry it out in one's own party.

This Mr. Tilden has had the rare courage and ability to do. Against great obstacles he commenced and carried through the Herculean task of fighting corruption and pursuing the plunderers in his own party, and it is almost superfluous to say that the courage, energy, untiring perseverance and acumen that he displayed in those memorable contests prove that he possesses in a most eminent degree the qualities so much needed in our Chief Magistrate in the present crisis of our affairs.

In regard to all questions of finance and reform we have the sure criterion of his past to enable us to form positive convictions as to his future.

In his hands may be safely left the task of awarding liberal justice to the South, while jealously guarding the rights of the North and the issues decided by the great struggle ended, I trust and believe, forever.

When elected I believe he will enter upon the duties of his high office with the single purpose of serving his country faithfully, and with no lower ambition than that of devoting every faculty to the glorious task of rendering the nation prosperous at home, honored and respected abroad. I would like to appeal to those who in civil life have honored me with their friendship and support, and especially and most earnestly to those men to whom I have never appealed in vain—my comrades of the war—and ask them to stand once more with me in our country's cause, in a civil contest now, as formerly in a deadlier struggle, and support to the uttermost the election of Mr. Tilden to the Presidency.

I believe that the issues now at stake are similar to those for which we fought—the honor and well-being of the nation.

I am, very truly yours,
GEO. B. MACCLELLAN.

The American People.

No people in the world suffer as much with Dyspepsia as Americans. Although years of experience in medicine has failed to accomplish a certain and sure remedy for this disease and its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Heart-burn, Water-brash, Sick Headache, Costiveness palpitation of the Heart, Liver Complaint, coming up of the food, low spirits, general debility, etc., yet since the introduction of GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER we believe there is no case of Dyspepsia that cannot be immediately relieved. 30,000 dozen sold last year without one case of failure being reported. Go to your Druggist Wm. H. Voorhees and get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you. Regular size 75 cents.

To the Public!
It is with pleasure that I inform the citizens of Plainfield and vicinity that I have purchased the fixtures and good will in the Shaving & Hair Cutting establishment formerly occupied by J. R. Offley, on FRONT ST., (over Berry & Thorn's Hardware Store), and propose thoroughly renovating and improving the same until it shall be second to none in the State. I respectfully solicit a continuance of trade from the former patrons of the place, and will use my best endeavors to please all, and also to keep a clean and orderly place. None but first-class workmen employed.

GREEN'S PATENT
American
DRIVEN WELL.
To the Executors and Administrators of the Sebring Estate, also, to W. J. Nelson, of Plainfield, New Jersey:
Whereas, I did on the 27th day of November, 1869, give Abram Sebring authority to drive wells, in different parts of New Jersey, under the above patent, as per well drivers contract of that date, with the right to revoke it at my discretion; and whereas, I did on or about the first day of September, 1870, revoke said contract by writing, which was given him personally and acknowledged by him, and afterwards made of no avail by his death; and whereas, use has since been made of said contract by W. J. Nelson and others, claiming the rights therein granted—without reference to said revocation. Now, therefore, I hereby forbid the use of said contract by the said Sebring estate, W. J. Nelson, or any other person in the state of New Jersey, in any way, shape or form whatsoever, and I hereby repudiate all acts done under authority of said contract since Sept. 1st, 1870.

CAUTION!
The undersigned would caution the public against using or sinking driven wells under Nelson W. Green's patent, unless the same are put down by him, as all parties using the same otherwise put down, or sinking such wells will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, he having the exclusive right to sink driven wells in Plainfield. The following is a decision recently rendered by Judge Benedict, of Brooklyn, N. Y.
"Wm. D. Andrews, owner of a patent granted to Col. Nelson W. Green, for a driven well, sued Theo. A. Carman some time ago to restrain him from the use of the patent in the manufacture of a similar well. The testimony filled over one thousand pages and counsel were over two weeks in summing before Judge Benedict in Brooklyn. The patent is worth a million dollars. The well is an air-tight iron tube, driven into the ground until it reaches water-bearing strata. An air pump is screwed on the top of the tube, and the other end is of steel, made sharp and perforated. Many thousands of the wells are in use. Carman is accused of using a similar well. Counsel for the defence contended that the patent was merely a new plan of more easily reaching the water bearing strata, and could not be held patentable. Judge Benedict held that the idea of forcing water from the earth into a well pit by artificial means was new, but was not patentable, but that the method by which the idea is made available was patentable. He decided that the infringement had been clearly proved."

A DELIGHTFUL shower of rain allayed the intolerable dust and slightly cooled the atmosphere for the time being on Wednesday afternoon last.

THE Westfield Townsman has gone where the woodbine twineth, another evidence that newspapers, as a general rule, are not paying institutions.

QUERY—Did the same man who cut the wire holding the Democratic banner, steal the silver plate containing name of maker, from Abe Egbertson's buggy, Sunday night?

SUNDAY evening services will be resumed in the Congregational Church, commencing at 7½ o'clock next Sunday evening. Also prayer meetings Wednesday evenings at 7½ o'clock.

A FINE cow was stolen from the premises of J. L. Everitt, Esq., on Front Street, Tuesday night last. The cow is described as a red one, and a reward of $10 is offered for her recovery.

FROM the Somerset Gazette we learn that the "Silver Tongued Orator of Somerset" announces himself as a candidate for Congress from the 4th District—on the Republican side, of course.

A SHORT time since our city was flooded with papers on electrical treatment for many forms of diseases, but as Dr. Carmen applies it upon purely scientific principles and with marked success here in Plainfield, why go elsewhere for such treatment?

PARTIES desiring to secure bargains in Furniture, upholstered goods, &c., should attend the great clearing out sale of Casper, the furniture dealer, on Second St., above the City Hotel. Being about to engage in other business he will sell out his entire stock at auction. See adv. in another column.

WE understand Prof. Lyon intends to introduce the admirable system of day board after the example of the Charlier Institute, New York, by which parents living at a distance can make arrangements to have their sons take their noon-day meal with the family of the Principal.

MESSRS FLANAGAN & SCUDDER are proprietors of "The Business Directory of the Central Railroad of New Jersey," instead of agents for the same as we last week stated. The book will be an excellent guide for business men and the public generally and should be patronized.

THE camp meeting of the A. M. E. Zion Church of Bloomington, Rev. Anthony Jackson, pastor, which has been held for 2 weeks past in the woods of Mr. E. A. Van Syckle, at Bound Brook, near the canal, will be continued over the next Sabbath, (31 inst.) and a general invitation is extended to all to attend.

THERE will be a grand Peach Festival at Sterling, N. J., next Tuesday, Sept. 5th, for the benefit of Sterling Chapel. A large tent will be erected on the grounds in which will be served refreshments, ice cream, peaches, &c. A novel feature of the occasion will be a curiosity shop presided over by ladies in costume. Supper, only 25 cents.

WE direct the attention of the public to the advertisement of Voorhees, the Druggist, which appears in another column. Mr. Voorhees has the neatest and best stocked drug store in the city, and has reduced his prices to accord with the present depression of trade. Read his advertisement carefully and patronize his establishment.

THE following additional books have been added to the library of the Plainfield Public School:

Daniel Deronda,	George Eliot.
Edith Lyle,	Mary Jane Holmes.
Dolliver Romance,	Hawthorne.

The Cooking Club,	Ella Farman.
Starboard and Port,	Geo. Hepworth.
Theophilus and others,	Mary Mapes Dodge.

THIS afternoon (Thursday) the pole of the sprinkling wagon of P. M. French came in collision with the family carriage of L. Heyniger on the corner of Front and Somerset Streets, nearly overturning the same and demolishing one of the hind wheels of Mr. H's carriage. It was fortunate that none of the lady occupants were injured.

ONE of the greatest nuisances of our city is the practice of venders of quack medicines, song books, &c., selling their wares on Somerset Street just over the county line. The street is invariably blocked up by a crowd on these occasions so that it is almost impossible for pedestrians and vehicles to pass through. Is there no way to stop this nuisance?

THE "Hayes and Wheeler Legion" of Plainfield turned out for the first time on Tuesday night last, and paraded through two or three streets with solemn tread. They numbered 28 torches, although we are informed there was 75 uniforms awaiting for some one to fill them at the Club rooms. The boys (!) expect (!) to raise their number to 200 some time.

WE see by yesterday's rifle practice of the American Team at Creedmore, that our townsman, Mr. C. E. Overbaugh, stands the sixth highest in the list of the 15 that shot, having made 193 out of the possible 225 points. The 1st eight scores made 1,584 points, a feat that has never before been equaled by any team. We wish our friend good luck and hope to see him yet head the list.

GRASSHOPPERS are committing fearful ravages in the Western country. We were shown a letter from a Mrs. Rachel Betsworth, to her father, James Lott of this city, dated Lemair, Plymouth Co., Iowa, Aug. 21st., which states that the grasshoppers were with them three weeks and one day, eating up all the garden truck and grain so that on a tract of 160 acres they do not expect to reap more than six bushels of wheat to the acre. The ground is honeycombed with holes wherein are deposited the eggs of the "hoppers" to be hatched out next year and pester the farmers. The letter speaks very discouraging of the chances for a living the coming winter among the farmers.

SUNDAY evening last about 8 o'clock, residents adjoining Spicer & Hubbard's Moulding Mill on Madison Avenue, observed a man endeavoring to gain an entrance into the building through a window in the 2d story over the roof of a shed. When the would-be intruder found that he was observed, he pulled his slouched hat over his eyes and closed the shutters of the window, which he had opened. Mr. Hubbard was notified, who proceeded to thoroughly search the building, but no person could be found therein. A policeman was then stationed in the building over night, but there was no repitition of the attempted entrance inside. What the fellow's motive was to get inside the building is not known, but it is surmised that incendiarism was the object.

THOMAS PARY, the veteran restaurant man of Plainfield, has re-opened his neat and well regulated establishment of that kind on Front Street, opposite Laing's Hotel, where at all times the public may be assured of procuring a good meal at a fair price. For an oyster stew, Tom cannot be excelled. He invites all his old friends and the public generally to give him a call.

THE Central Times of this week contains an article on Mr. Sullivan's speech at Laing's Hall last week, wherein he says—"the Republican party has never kept a pledge." The Times then recounts numerous professed pledges made and kept by the Republican party. We can tell the Times one pledge the party in the person of its representative man made but never kept and that was the pledge—"Let no guilty man escape." Where are Belknap and other guilty officials?

SUNDAY morning last, about eleven o'clock, the Tilden and Hendricks Banner on North Avenue suddenly fell to the ground, the cause being found upon investigation to be the breaking of the wire cable on which the banner is suspended.—From the appearance of the cable it would seem that four of the seven strands had been cut, thus causing the other three to break when the wind caused an extra strain on the cable. We can hardly conceive that there is any one in the opposite party so mean and despicable as to commit an act so atrocious, and will abide future developments before expressing an opinion as to whether the act eminated from that quarter.

FOUR roughs entered the saloon of Paddy Day on 3d Street, last Monday night, and abused his wife and himself, and then attempted to "go through" the money drawer. Officer Hedden, hearing the noise in that direction, proceeded to the scene and ascertaining the circumstances, followed the men up town and found officer Clark interrogating three of them. They were immediately arrested, and lodged in the Station House. The fourth man was found at the depot and arrested by officer Hedden. The fellow showed fight as he was about entering the bastile, (?) but the officer speedily induced him to keep quiet. The prisoners were brought before Judge Good next day and fined $5 and costs, and to be confined in Elizabeth jail if not paid.

Delegates to the State and Congressional Convention will be chosen at the Primary next Tuesday evening.

Found.

A lady's gold pencil, with name engraved thereon. The owner may recover the same by paying expenses of advertising. Enquire at E. P. Thorn's Family Liquor Store, Cherry Street.

A pocket-book containing a small sum of money was also picked up in the street the other day and awaits an owner at this office.

Primary Meeting.

In another column will be found a call from the Chairman of the "Democratic Organization of Plainfield" calling for a Primary Meeting to be held in the rooms of the Young Men's Tilden and Hendricks Reform Club NEXT TUESDAY EVENING, Sept. 5th, to elect delegates to attend the State and Congressional Conventions. Let every Democrat in the Township be present.

A Democratic Outrage.

After the "Plainfield Hayes and Wheeler Legion" (28 torches) had returned to their Club Room from their street parade last Tuesday evening, three cheers for the candidates espoused by them were given by the immense (?) throng, when some advocate of the people's favorite candidates, among the large gathering in front of the rooms, proposed three cheers for Tilden and Hendricks, which were given with such a will as to drown out the feeble cheers for Hayes and Wheeler. Such dastardly outrages (?) should call forth the protective arm of Grant and his troops.

A Hazardous and Successful Surgical Operation.

We are informed that one of the gravest operations pertaining to the domain of surgery was recently performed upon the person of Mrs. J. C. Van Name, of this city, and recently from Staten Island, by Dr. Monroe B. Long, the associate of Dr. Sutphen. On the 18th inst., Mrs. V. and her friends were surprised by Dr. Sutphen, who had just been called and who had made every effort at reduction, that her condition was that of Strangulated Femoral Hernia, and that the only relief to be obtained was from a surgical operation, which demanded superior surgical skill. Before venturing upon so grave a course, upon the morning of the 19th ult., a consultation was ordered by Dr. Sutphen, to which were invited, and at which were present, Drs. Long, Tomlinson, C. H. Stillman, Sr. and Jr., and Hart, to determine the nature of the case, which resulted after very careful deliberation, in the decision that recovery was impossible without an operation and that without delay, and that the operation, although extremely delicate and dangerous, afforded the only ray of hope left the patient. At the request of Dr. Sutphen, Dr. Long consented to undertake and perform the operation, which was at once commenced, after complete anæsthesia had been produced, in the presence of and aided by the afore-named medical gentleman. The operation was complex in its character, the gravity of which was only revealed as the surgical knife approached the seat of difficulty, and which more than proved the correctness of the diagnosis.—We are happy to learn that the operation has been attended with uninterrupted and complete success, and that an affectionate wife and a loving mother has been restored to her family and a large circle of grateful friends.

Personalia.

We are glad to note that our friend and townsman, Capt. Geo. Mehl, is once more to be seen on our streets, although he has to walk with the aid of crutches. It will be remembered that Capt. Mehl received injuries from a fall from a building at Elizabeth, some weeks since, and was removed to St. Michael's Hospital at Newark for treatment. Mr. Abram Bennett who received severe injuries at the same time, has also returned to his home in Dunellen from the same hospital.

Councilman Voorhees and wife, who have been sojourning at Saratoga for several days, returned to their home, this city, last Saturday morning, being called from their recreation trip by the sudden illness of one of their children.

We yesterday had the pleasure of assisting to eat a monster musk melon weighing ten pounds and measuring twenty-four inches in circumference, which was grown on the farm of Halstead Compton, Esq., at Evona. The melon was fine, as all of that specie are which come from Mr. Compton's patch.

THE Rev. Chas. C. Fiske, Rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, having returned from his summer vacation, will re-enter upon his duties next Sunday morning.

Mr. Halsey DeCamp and wife, of Syracuse, N. Y., are spending a few days in this city, visiting Mr. DeCamp's brother, Hiram.

Messrs. N. P. Rogers & Son will please accept our thanks for a fine, large melon left in our office this morning.

Peter Ten Broeck has a few of those fine steel plate engravings of the candidates for President and Vice President of both political parties, executed by the well-known artist, Geo. Perrine. The price of them are within reach of all; 25 cents each.

Mr. William Stedman, our tall Scotch friend, who for several months past has been stopping with Street Commissioner Wilson, sails on Saturday for Australia, where he will engage in commercial business.

We call attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Plainfield Academy.

State Agricultural Society.

The Executive Committee of the State Agricultural Society held a meeting on the Fair Grounds at Waverly on Saturday at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The different sub-committees reported favorably of the progress towards completion of the final arrangements for the annual fair in September. Already a number of entries have been sent in to the Secretary, and things would now indicate that some of the departments will be more full than in former years. The schedule of premiums may be had on application to any of the officers in Elizabeth. We hope the farmers of Union county will strive to make the exhibit of their products the best this year of all others. The managers desire to make this an Agricultural Fair, and the agricultural productions of our State will compare favorably with any other State in the Union, therefore there should be a good show.

Democrats, attend the Primary Meeting next Tuesday evening. See Call.

Plainfield Democracy.

The Democracy of Plainfield Township and City, met in the rooms of the "Young Men's Tilden and Hendricks Reform Club," last (Wednesday) evening in large numbers for the purpose of re-organization for the campaign now upon us. The meeting was called to order by James H. Parker, Chairman of last meeting of the "Jackson Democratic Association of Plainfield," with W. W. Gamble, as Secretary. After stating the object of the meeting, Hon. J. W. Yates offered a resolution that the Association above named be dissolved and that officers be elected for the "Democratic Organization of Plainfield City and Township," which was adopted. Ex-Mayor, John H. Evans was then by acclamation unanimously elected President of the Organization, with James H. Parker, Wm. H. Voorhees and William B. Maxson, as Vice Presidents, W. W. Gamble, Secretary, Joseph A. Miller, Ass't. Sec. and D. J. Marshall, Treas. The following Executive Committee were then elected: W. L. Force, John H. Jackson, Joseph W. Yates, A. A. Holcombe and Wm. J. Tobin, after which the meeting adjourned. The Democrats of Plainfield are now thoroughly organized with two splendid organizations, working in unity and harmony with each other, the effect of which will tell heavily against the opposition in the coming fight.

In Ex-Mayor Evans the new organization has one of our most highly respected and influential citizens, one who will give eclat to the organization as its presiding officer.

Stolen Goods Recovered.

Our readers will remember that we last week narrated the capture of a thief in his attempt to steal goods from the residence of Mr. Jackson on Union Avenue, and his subsequent sentence to the County Jail to await trial. The thief's name was John Murray, who a few days ago addressed a letter to a Catherine Williams, No. 79 East Broadway, N. Y., whom he claimed was his sister. The Warden of the jail notified Capt. Breen of this city, of the circumstance, and that official immediately proceeded to New York and calling at the Seventh Precinct Station House secured the services of a detective and visited the premises, where the woman Catherine Williams was found in company with a small child. Considerable questioning failed to prove that the woman was an accomplice of the thief, until the little girl made a move to take something from a vase on the mantel piece. Instantly the detective and Capt. Breen were at the spot and found in the vase a number of pawn tickets. The woman was immediately placed under arrest and the house searched, revealing a large amount of stolen property, such as wearing apparel, bedding, silver ware, &c., part of which was recognized by marks as the property of Mr. Cushman, of Plainfield, Garret Barry, of Rahway, Gen. Geo. B. McClellan, and others. Capt. Breen then left word to have the goods sent to headquarters and he would call there the next day. The detective agreed to do so and informing his prisoner that he was ready, Catherine asked the privilege to step into the water closet. The request was granted by him, but after waiting some time he found his prisoner had given him the slip. In the mean time another woman had entered the room, who stated that she was Murray's sister and had just come from a visit to him at Elizabeth. After an hour's conference with this woman, she agreed to tell where Catherine was, and she was re-arrested. A day or two afterward Capt. Breen went to the station house to look at and identify some of the goods, when he found that some of the most valuable had been spirited away, including a valuable seal skin sacque, velvet cloak, &c., belonging to Mrs. Gen. McClellan. He at once asked the detective where they were, and that officer replied that no such goods were among the lot recovered. It at once struck Capt. Breen that the detective had given these and other goods to the second woman to tell him where his escaped prisoner was, rather than to suffer disgrace at headquarters, and he determined at once to lay the matter before Gen. Smith and Supt. Walling of the Police Department, which he did, and it was speedily ascertained that this woman had left on Saturday last for Springfield, Ohio, with four large trunks, which it is surmised were filled with the stolen goods. Measures were at once taken to recover them and to arrest the woman. Capt. Breen, meanwhile proceeded to unearth other articles hidden away in pawn shops, tickets for which were found among the stolen goods, the officials of the department lending him their aid and assistance. The arrested receiver, Catharine Williams, says Murray is her brother. That worthy is confined in the Union County Jail, and is encased in a straight jacket, he insisting that he is crazy.

Murray is evidently an old hand at the business of thieving, but has at last come to the end of his rope by being too venturesome in Jersey. He does not seem to be well known to the New York police, although it has come out that he resided at 261 East Broadway previous to his arrest, and that he lived in Varick Street when the residence of Gen. McClellan was robbed.

In the arrest of these two persons, the proceeds of a number of systematic robberies in Union and Essex counties have been brought to light, and Captain Breen is deserving of great praise for the manner in which he has worked up this case, in spite of the opposition of the New York detective who ere this is probably disgraced from office. To Capt. Breen belongs all honor in bringing to justice the receiver, Catharine Williams.

PROCEEDINGS COMMON COUNCIL.

TUESDAY EV'G, Aug. 29, 1876.

SPECIAL MEETING.

Council met in special meeting.

Members all present except Messrs. Tier, Voorhees, Simpson and Harris.

Pres. Mr. Smith in chair.

On motion, the reading of the minutes and the regular order of business were dispensed with.

The Pres. having stated the object of the meeting, the Clerk then read a letter addressed to him dated Aug. 14, 1876, from Geo. Boyd, as follows:—Yours of 9th inst. reached me to-night, informing me of my appointment as Com'r for appraising, &c., property on Cherry St. As it will be out of my power to attend to the same, I must respectfully decline accepting the appointment.

On motion of Mr. Thorn, the resignation of Mr. Boyd was accepted.

Mr. Brown offered a preamble and res. that on August 7th, A. D. 1876, James Parker, George Boyd and Joseph S. Cutter were appointed Com'rs to make an estimate and assessment of the damages that any person owning property situated on Cherry St., between the southeasterly line of North Ave. and the northwesterly line of Seventh Street in said city, will sustain by reason of the widening of said Cherry St. between said southeasterly line of North Ave. and the northwesterly line of Seventh St.; and whereas, said George Boyd, one of said Com'rs, has declined to serve in said capacity, therefore, resolved, that J. Oakley Nodyne, a judicious and disinterested citizen of the city of Plainfield, be and he is hereby appointed a Com'r in the place and stead of said George Boyd, to make the estimate and assessment, together with said James Parker and Joseph S. Cutter, and to do and perform all the duties required in the premises by the act entitled "An Act to amend the charter of the city of Plainfield," approved April 4th, 1872, and the supplements thereto.

On motion of Mr. French, the preamble was received and res. adopted.

Mr. Brown also offered a preamble and res. that the Special Com. appointed by res. adopted July 13th, 1876, to confer with the judgment creditors of the city, and to ascertain upon what terms executions on their respective judgments may be stayed, did on the 7th day of August, 1876, report that they had received from said judgment creditors the following propositions: James Brand will, upon payment to him of the balance, stay execution on $1,000 of his judgment for 11 months, from September 1st, 1876; John Simpson, assignee of Wm. Hand, and Campbell & Hand, on the same terms and for the same time, will stay $2,000; Stephen O. Horton, on same terms for the same time, $1,000; Elias N. Miller, assignee of Wm. H. Allen, same time and terms, $500; and did recommend the adoption of a res. that the terms upon which the judgment creditors of the city propose to stay their respective executions, as reported by the Special Com., be accepted, and that the Corp. Counsel be requested to draw the proper stipulations and vouchers therefor, which res. was on the 7th day of Aug., 1876, duly adopted; therefore, resolved that warrants be drawn in favor of said judgment creditors, less the several sums as aforementioned, and the said warrants to be delivered when said judgment creditors have duly stayed their respective executions as aforesaid, and released the present tax levy from the lien of their respective judgments.

On motion of Mr. French, the preamble was received and res. adopted.

On motion, Council adjourned to meet first regular meeting in Sept., (Monday.)

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

We are credibly informed that it was no fault of the School Trustees of North Plainfield Public School that the salary of the janitor was cut down. It seems that the janitor, fearing that some one would apply for the position at a lower salary than he was getting, addressed a letter to the Trustees saying he would accept the position for $10 a month, and if any one else offered to work for that he would perform the duties for $9. The trustees did receive another bid for the position, but concluded to retain the old janitor at a salary of $12 per month, three dollars more than he offered to work for.

Jacob Kriney and Augustus Mobus were last Saturday elected delegates to attend the Democratic Congressional Convention at Washington, Warren Co., to-day (Thursday).

Thieves effected an entrance into the residence of Mr. Theo. French, on Somerset St., Wednesday night last, and took all the silver ware on the first floor of the house. They then visited the cellar and partook of a lunch from the refrigerator, making their exit by the front door, setting a camp stool against the door on the outside to prevent the same being opened. The thieves gained entrance into the building through a side window, evidently by pushing the catch back and then raising it. They left a cane behind them, which may help lead to their identification.

The Democrats of North Plainfield are alive to the important issues of the day and have resolved to form a Tilden and Hendricks Club, a call for a meeting to organize the same being found in another column.—Good, boys, up and at them.

Alphonso Wilson, the veteran well driver of New Jersey, is sinking a well on the premises of Mr. Brown, on the mountain side (or New Grove St.) which is already 140 feet deep. It is thought that when a proper depth is obtained that the well will be a flowing one. We hope so.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Last Wednesday, Aug. 30th, was a merry day with the Baptist Sunday School. At 7:30, A. M., about 200 persons, including scholars, teachers, parents and friends, gathered at the Baptist Church and proceeded in carriages, at such distances from each other so as not to take the dust, to Mr. H. E. Acker's beautiful grove, Woodbridge Beach, arriving there at about 9:30. The day was spent in the usual way at this place, in swinging, playing croquet, boating, bathing and a few "tripped the light fantastic" (?) At noon, the many tables in the grove were bountifully spread with "tempting delicacies" and the more "substantial edibles," of which all partook with an appetite strongly indicative of "salt air" influences. The day as well as the place, was all that could be desired, and the occasion one long to be remembered by that school. Mr. C. A. Smith, Superintendent, and other friends of the School, are deserving of especial mention for their untiring energies in making this a happy occasion.—Acker's Grove is situated on a bluff overlooking Woodbridge Bay and the Western shores of Staten Island, and a better place for a Picnic it would be difficult to find.

Dr. Dodd and his accomplished wife, of this village, have gone on a trip to Saratoga, Niagara Falls and Montreal.

The regular weekly meeting of the Tilden and Hendricks Reform Association was held in their rooms, Dean's building, on Tuesday evening, Aug. 29th, at 7:30 o'clock, Pres't. C. W. L. Martine in the Chair, George W. Marsh, acting Secretary. After the transaction of the usual routine business, some 25 or 30 names were presented for membership, and duly elected. Then after speeches by Messrs. Squier, Smalley and Ritchie, and the singing of a patriotic song, the meeting adjourned to Monday evening, Sept. 4th, at the same hour.

On Saturday, Aug. 26th, a disgraceful disturbance occurred in this unusually quiet village, near the residence of Mr. Andrew Schuyler, in which "Fusil Oil" and "Benzine" were the "motive power." Result, bruised flesh and "banged" eyes.

The members of the Tilden and Hendricks Club, of this village, will remember that the next meeting will take place on Monday evening, Sept. 4th, 1876, at the usual hour. Primary meeting at Westfield, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 5th, 1876.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Last Monday night week was the date set down for a primary meeting of the Republicans to re-organize that association and to select delegates to attend the State and Congressional Convention of the party. From an eye-witness we are informed that after waiting a long time after the hour appointed for the opening of the meeting, there were but eight Republicans and eight Democrats in attendance, and as there was no indication of the meeting coming to order, a prominent Democrat in the assemblage, arose and asked "when this meeting was coming to order?" Then there was a consultation and delegates elected by eight loyal and true representatives of the party who advocate corruption, none of their own number being chosen, after which this vast (!) and enthusiastic (?) meeting adjourned. Verily, the advocates of Hayes & Wheeler in Westfield, do not seem to be very active in that village.

All Democrats and supporters of Tilden and Hendricks are invited to the Primary Meeting next Tuesday evening.

BUSINESS LOCALS.

The canning factories of Burlington county are now in full operation, employing a large number of workmen [illegible]. The crop is sufficiently abundant for the demand.

Parties wanting Monuments and Headstones cannot do better than go to Manning's City Marble Works next to M. E. Church Front Street, as he has a large assortment and good marble. 1y

It is reported that the cranberry crop in Burlington county will not equal that of last year.—The intense hot weather had the effect of making the scald more extensive than usual. Still, a large quantity will be gathered.

Pony phaetons, buggies, business wagons, &c., for sale cheap at L. M. French's.

A Calcium Light Hop was a pleasing and brilliant spectacle at Congress Hall, Cape May, the other evening. As it was something new, it attracted a large crowd from the various hotels, and it is said the effect of the various colored lights upon the dresses and jewelry of the moving throng was most beautiful.

Manning has a large variety of Mantels. y1

Sunday night last Pier No. 4 of the Central R. R. docks in Elizabethport was entirely destroyed by fire. The dock was formerly used as the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad shipping depot and was abandoned a year ago. There were 15 loaded coal cars on the dock, all of which were destroyed, and 350 tons of coal were burned or thrown into the water. Two canal boats were also burned. The loss is between $40,000 and $50,000. There was no fire used on the dock, and the disaster was probably due to incendiarism.

Should your horse become unruly and break your carriage, send it to L. M. French's Factory, Somerset Street, and have it repaired speedily and at a fair price.

Police Officer Dickerson who was shot some time ago by the Thelborn brothers, visited police head-quarters in Newark, Saturday. He looks none the worse for his injuries. The ball is still in his body in the region of his left lung.

Butter, Wholesale and Retail, at Moore's, Leeson's building, Front St. tf

Mr. Lewis Smith, a farmer, residing at Pleasant Valley, above Titusville, in Mercer county, while ploughing his fallow ground about three weeks since, ploughed up a copper shield 4 3-4 inches long by 2 1-2 inches wide. The figures are raised, and consist of a spread-eagle surmounted by a wreath of laurel leaves, with the words "E Pluribus Unum" in a scroll above, and the figures "1776" underneath. Is it a revolutionary relic?

Manning has a large assortment of Granite Monuments. je9y1.

A few days since while Harrison Wright, of Flanders, was working in his field, a hoop snake fastened itself about his leg, which he shook off without much trouble, and with the assistance of a comrade, they succeeded in killing the reptile, leaving Mr. W. unharmed.

Breech Loading guns, also a large stock of muzzle-loading guns for sale at Vanderbeek's, Cherry St.

At 1 o'clock Sunday morning two tramps entering Elizabeth on the Pennsylvania R. R. track, discovered the body of what upon examination proved to be that of a young man of about 18 years of age. The body was terribly mangled, the skull was badly fractured and both legs were separated from the body. The mangled corpse was taken to the freight office at the Union depot, and County Physician Gillette telegraphed for. A five cent piece was found in the pocket of the deceased but nothing to identify the remains. found. It is supposed that the deceased was a tramp.

ANDERSON & STEPHENSON are in town soliciting orders for the large Nursery firm of Burtis, Hammond & Co., Geneva, N. Y. They sell none but the best stock.

A young man named Joseph Madden, of Keyport, fell dead in a dentist's office in that place, on Thursday last. He went in to have some teeth extracted, but the dentist thought he was too weak. He fell forward and expired while the dentist was talking.

The new Hat Store is being stocked up this week with a fine line of Fall Styles of Hats, Caps and Gents. Furnishing Goods, at greatly reduced prices. Remember the place, Radford's building, 4 doors from Laing's Hall. 1w

Miss Carrie Jones, of Keyport, was fatally burned on Friday by the explosion of kerosene, which she was pouring into a stove to make the wood light quickly.

Carriages repaired on short notice at L. M. French's Carriage Manufactory.

Every one afflicted with those maladies for which the external application of sulphur has long been known to be efficacious, can prepare a sulphur bath without resorting to public bathing houses. Glenn's Sulphur Soap furnishes the means. Sold everywhere.

GENERAL NEWS.

A physician advertises in the Meriden, Conn., newspaper that he has no power over his appetite for alcohol, and that he will prosecute anybody who sells him any.

All the swamp lands in the vicinity of the South Pass of the Mississippi, amounting to several thousand acres, have been purchased by J. B. Eads for twenty-five cents an acre.

A fat man can sit on the thumb nail of the statue of the Goddess of Liberty to be erected in New York by the Frenchmen.

A telegram from Port Jervis states that the results of the break in the coal combination are beginning to be shown. The transportation of coal on the Erie Railway has begun, and seventeen engines that have been laid up are again at work.

Courier Journal—Local: The beautiful and gorgeously furnished bridal chambers on the new Bob Lee, remarkable to relate, were first occupied by two old maids, one of whom took the cholera morbus and like to have died, and the other never slept a wink. It is sad!

The 2,000 breweries in the United States produce yearly 295,000,000 gallons of malt liquor. Most of them have been built within the last twenty-five years.

In California a single machine turns out an average of sixteen hundred bushels of wheat in a day, while instances are not rare of two thousand bushels having been threshed in one day. Moreover, the tracts on which these machines are at work average fifty bushels to the acre, the wheat in some cases standing five-and-a-half feet high.

Within the past thirty years the manufacture of silk is the greatest addition to the industries of New Jersey.—The product in all the States, in 1875, was worth $27,158,217. Of this, New Jersey was responsible for one-third, New York and Connecticut standing next. The great centre of the trade is Paterson, where seven new factories were completed or erected last year.

On Tuesday a collision occurred at the Elizabethport junction of the New Jersey Central Railroad. At that point the trains on the Long Branch Railroad cross from the northern to the southeastern track. The passenger train which left Jersey City for Branch at 5 o'clock Tuesday morning had nearly reached the crossing, when a freight train was seen approaching from the opposite direction. It was too late to stop either train, and the passengers, observing the danger, were thrown into intense excitement. Stephen Gregory, the engineer of the freight train, whistled down brakes, and then jumped from the engine to avoid the crash, which seemed inevitable. The engineer of the passenger train put on a full head of steam, and the train dashed over the crossing, the locomotive of the freight train grazing the rear end of the last passenger car. Both the locomotive and the car were slightly damaged. Gregory was picked up insensible, and found to be seriously and probably fatally injured.

SHOT AND SHELL.

"Live within your income," that's the Reform motto.

General Herndon, Lincoln's law partner, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

Fighting Joe Hooker, in whom Lincoln reposed signal confidence, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

Judge Caton, Lincoln's most intimate friend and adviser during the war, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

Gideon Welles, the honest Secretary of the Navy, in Lincoln's cabinet, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

Charles Francis Adams, the ablest of our Foreign Ministers under Lincoln, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

A campaign song begins, "Come, all ye honest Republicans!" It is a comic song, and makes everybody laugh.

Ex-Governor Palmer of Illinois, the life-long friend of Lincoln, and the gallant soldier, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

The Indiana Democracy are under great obligations to Kilpatrick. He has done them as much good as any of their own orators.

Cassius M. Clay, still another of Lincoln's Ministers abroad, and one of the founders of the Republican party, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

Guerilla Mosby, Brick Pomeroy, General Kilpatrick and Henry Ward Beecher, are for Rutherford B. Hayes and "Reform"—in a horn.

Governor Tilden met a large number of prominent Jersey Democrats on Thursday, at the country residence of A. S. Hewitt in this State.

A Tilden club, composed entirely of Union soldiers, has been formed at Springfield, Ill. A number of them were formerly Republicans.

Montgomery Blair, another member of Lincoln's Cabinet, and one of the original members of the Republican party, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

It is pertinently suggested that when the "Boys in Blue" meet in Convention, Belknap ought to go before them and tell all about the swindling head-stone contracts.

A mob of roughs from a Republican caucus broke up a Democratic meeting at Bennington, Vt., Saturday. Stones were thrown, windows broken, and one lady was injured.

General Sigel, whom Lincoln regarded as our most gallant German officer, and who acted with the Republican party long after Lincoln's death, is for Samuel J. Tilden.

When Gov. Tilden has reduced the taxes of his State nearly fifty per cent., why are the Republicans so alarmed at the idea of his becoming President of the United States?

Republican leaders in Virginia complain that the negroes manifest no enthusiasm in Hayes and Wheeler, and that all the old-time interest in politics seems to have died out.

A Republican paper has discovered that Hayes' initials stand for "Right Before Heaven." It should remember there is another place that is sometimes spelled with a capital H.

If corruption is to cease under the rule of Gov. Hayes, how is it that Zachariah Chandler is Chairman of the Committee which has in charge the management of his canvass?

It is wafted from Long Branch that Grant will throw all the power of the administration in behalf of Hayes, and as a preparatory step has invited the Governor to visit him there.

"A bloody shirt campaign, with money, and Indiana is safe." Without either or both, says Kilpatrick, "we are beaten." And then he complains that "national committee has done nothing."

The New Haven Register puts the exact truth in this shape: "The troops are wanted in the South to protect the negroes in clubbing their companions, who vote the Democratic ticket, to death."

At Shelbyville, Ind., a Tilden and Hendricks flag floats from a pole 225 feet high, to the great disgust of many members of the other party, who predicted that a pole of that length could not be raised.

There is one charge that should be made against Tilden without further delay, and before so many are made that there will not be room for any more, and that is that "he stole Charlie Ross."—Phila. Times.

The border settlers are to be left to the tomahawk and scalping knife, and the troops are to be used to manage the elections for the Republican party. Is such a party the proper one to control a free government?

The Evansville Courier asserts that Governor Hayes contributed $30,000 to the Ohio crusaders two years ago, and that he is an original Know Nothing. The Governor is rich enough to do it, and fanatic enough, we fear.

A number of fair-minded Republican journals throughout the country rebuke Secretaries Robeson and Tyner for attempting to make the Government employees think that extreme injustice has been done them by the Democratic House of Representatives in cutting down expenses.

This is a description which a Missouri idiot gives, in the Inter-Ocean, of a flag which he supposed to be Confederate: "It had three stripes—two red and one white; on one side it had in the corner a blue field with thirty-seven or thirty-eight stars; on the white stripe were the names of Tilden and Hendricks."

This is the way it strikes the Syracuse Courier: "If you elect Tilden, Tilden will be the President. If you elect Hayes, the Lord only knows who the President will be. It may be Conkling, or Morton, or Blaine, or old Simon Cameron, or even Boss Shepherd, or possibly a regency composed of the whole gang. The people should take no chances in such a lottery."

The veterans of the Union army who are now summoned to vote for Hayes and Wheeler should remember that a Republican Senate was mean enough to reduce the pension of Gen. Custer's widow from $50 to $30, after the Democratic House had fixed it at $50; and that the great Belknap levied enormous taxes on the post-traders for his own pocket, and the post-traders, to get even, plundered the soldiers of their hard-earned pay.

SHERIFF'S SALE.—In Chancery of New Jersey. Between Joshua C. Sanders, complainant, and Jonathan Edgar, et. al., defendants. Fi. fa. for sale of mortgaged premises.

By virtue of the above stated writ of fieri facias to me directed, I shall expose for sale at public vendue at the Court House, in the city of Elizabeth, N. J., on Wednesday, the 4th day of October, A. D., 1876, at two o'clock p. m., of said day, all those three tracts or parcels of land and premises, hereinafter particularly described, situate, lying and being in the township of Summit, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey:

The first tract—Beginning at the southeast corner of Springfield and Summit avenues; thence running easterly along the southerly line of Springfield avenue three hundred and twenty-eight feet to land of Le Huray; thence southerly in a straight line, parallel, or nearly so, to Summit avenue, along the line of land of Le Huray, five hundred and twenty feet to the northerly line of Union avenue; thence westerly along the northerly line of Union ave., two hundred and seven feet eight inches to land now or late of Johnathan Swift, thence northerly along the line of said land of Swift, parallel to Summit ave., one hundred and twelve ft. six inches; thence westerly still along the line of said land of Swift, at right angles to Summit avenue, one hundred and twenty-five feet to Summit avenue; and thence easterly along the easterly line of Summit avenue four hundred feet to the place of beginning.

"JENNY JUNE" ON FASHIONS.

GOSSIP ABOUT READY-MADE GARMENTS FOR LADIES.

There is nothing that is working a more certain change in the dress of woman than the gradual growth of the ready-made clothing interest. Ten years ago a dress for a lady could not be purchased ready-made in the city of New York, and a few years prior to that time under-clothing could only be obtained by special order, and at heavy cost. Now every article of ladies under-wear can be purchased at a small advance on the cost of material. Dresses can be found as readily and in as great variety as shoes and hosiery. The greater part of the clothing is produced en masse by manufacturers.

The whole interest is in the hands of business men, who put capital into the purchase of material and employ women to do the work.

There are from twenty-five to thirty such manufacturing houses in the city of New York; four or five of these employ from four to five hundred girls about nine months in the year.

Ready-made suits and dresses never make an early appearance, for the reason that the manufacturer waits for hints from imported styles before venturing on their production in large quantities. When ideas are obtained about styles which are likely to be popular, the work is pushed with incredible rapidity. Hundreds of dozens are turned out daily, and put upon the market at a very moderate cost; and are sold, if the style takes, faster than they can be furnished—with all the pressure that can be brought to bear upon the workers, supplemented by steam-power applied to thousands of sewing machines.

The greatest success that has ever been achieved in any one class of goods has been accomplished during the present summer, by the sudden eruption of self-colored lawns and cambrics in place of the ecru linens, which are unbecoming to many ladies, and of which not a few others were exceedingly tired. The black, brown, navy blue and bottle green cambrics adapt themselves to all complexions, and with simple hair lines of ecru, cream, or white-in linen or lace, present an extremely attractive appearance. Only the quantity which is produced and the counterparts which are met at every street corner suggest the possibility of their outliving the season.

It is rather curious that as yet no such popularity has been acquired for fall and winter ready-made suits as that which has attended the productions of the lighter materials for the summer season. The reason undoubtedly is that, the cost of the material being greater, and the retail cost nearly or quite double that of the most elaborate summer costumes, they do not strike the same class, nor the imagination of any class as do the five, ten and twelve dollar summer suits.

At present there are only three sizes of ready-made dresses to be had.—Dresses for misses and girls of fifteen to seventeen cannot be bought at all; but very soon the number of sizes will be increased, and the grading be more thorough.—The Illustrated Weekly.

A STORY OF GAMBLING.

Some twenty-eight years ago, said Senator Jones, of Nevada, I went to California, and on the way out was an old gambler, with a set out of faro boxes, roulette tables, etc. He took a liking to me, and he said: "Johnny, I'll tell you a secret that may save you many a dollar. Do you see this wheel? It's circle is black and red, and they bet on the colors—a nearly even chance. Now watch me, Johnny, as I get here and spin the ball. Do you see me gently raise my knee and press under the frame of the table? Well, those red and black compartments are connected by two sets of wires. I raise my knee when I see that the bulk of money is on the red, and that wire running through the reds trills and trembles, so that the ball won't rest on an any red cell, but is repelled and settles in some black spot. Johnny, remember this when you have bagged your gold dust." I went into a gambling house about a year afterward to make a stake. There was a fine, fighting gambler sitting there spinning roulette. Said I to myself: "Young man, I'll just take a peep at your knees." He raised them very gently, and I planted my money against the pile, knowing that when he swept the great amount off for the red he must pay the black. So I picked up a hundred dollars or so. Every time I hit it. That gambler got his eye on me.—It was an eye full of smallpox audacity. He addressed me in a loud tone of voice. Said he: "Didn't I tell you never to come here again? Didn't I tell you that this was a place for gentlemen? This is a gentleman's game. That man, gentlemen, it is my duty to warn you against; that loafer is a thief." Well, continued Jones, I had never in my life been there before, but I saw the scheme. If I resented what the boss said there were forty fellows there, cappers and so forth, to kick me down stairs and rob me, so I meekly said: "Well, sir, I do not wish to make any disturbance here.—If you don't want me here I'll take my money and go."

RAHWAY MANUFACTURERS.

HETFIELD AND JACKSON.

The two gentlemen who compose the above firm began life together as apprentice boys in the same shop nearly thirty years ago, and the fact of their present business relations exhibits a degree of unbroken friendship and business confidence not often seen. After learning their trade together, and utilizing this knowledge by ten years' experience as journeymen, they entered into co-partnership, establishing themselves on Seminary street, Rahway.—Two years thereafter, their business increasing, they purchased the property of Abram Ackerman, on Irving street, which they now occupy, and which they have enlarged and otherwise extensively improved, suitably to the requirements of the trade. Their present establishment in all of its arrangements, internally and externally, has been fitted up to meet every accommodation and requirements in their line of business.

This firm makes a specialty of the manufacture of light wagons, and particularly trotting sulkies, and although they manufacture other vehicles limitedly, to order and for sale, yet, in the light wagon and sulky line of trade, they have a reputation from Boston to New Orleans, and from New York to San Francisco. The senior member of the firm is a decided "horse man;" indeed, not to put too fine a point upon it, he "talks horse" and "knows horse" equal to any man in the State. He has taken to it by intuition, and, being a splendid judge and a warm admirer of all the qualities that belong to a fine horse, he has made it a study to get up sulkies and light wagons, by which the greatest trotting speed could be developed. It is said that there is no celebrated trotting mare or horse that has ever trod the American turf but has drawn one of Hetfield and Jackson's sulkies. Goldsmith Maid and Judge Fullerton have made their fastest time to these sulkies. Within the last few years the firm has added improvement upon improvement to their light wagons and sulkies with a view to lessening the weight, and at the same time maintaining the strength of the vehicle, until finally their efforts have culminated in the production of a 42 pound sulky, with all the strength of one four times that weight; upon this latter improvement they have filed an application for a patent, and one of these spider-web giants will be on exhibition at the ensuing State Fair at Waverly.

These two friends in apprenticeship and partners in mature are extending their business in every direction, and during the year 1875, we are informed, that they sold over 100 trotting wagons, which were used upon all the noted tracks, embracing those of Cleveland, Buffalo, Rochester, Utica, Poughkeepsie, Hartford, Springfield, Long Island, San Francisco and Boston. There is scarcely a single owner of a fast trotting horse to whom Hetfield and Jackson's trotting sulkies are not known.

The manufacture of their vehicles is under the direct supervision of the members of the firm, and they are the only firm in this section who manufacture their own wheels, a branch of the business which the senior member has made his particular study. In the selection of material for the manufacture of wheels they are particular to obtain the very best, and this fact together with their patent braces produces the lightest, and at the same time the strongest, wheel in the market.

We omitted to mention that in addition to the other improvements made by the firm in their trotting wagons they have also made an improvement in the shaft, which adds material strength without increasing the weight. This improvement is called the "combination shaft," and consists of a piece of hickory one and a quarter inches wide, and one quarter of an inch thick, inserted in the body of the shaft, which gives the shaft a strength sufficient to sustain a weight of 3,000 pounds.

Messrs. Hetfield & Jackson are comparatively young men, yet they have reached the foremost rank in their line of business in public favor. Being careful in their transactions, responsible in their business intercourse, jealous of their reputation, they endeavor to satisfy the public demand, and make friends of their patrons.—Woodbridge Ind. Hour.

It is reported that Mr. Wheeler is almost ready to explain his railroad subsidy operations in Congress. The Republicans must have patience. These things are intricate in their convolutions and take time.

In Fayette County, Ala., there are but eight white Republicans, and seven of these are office-holders.

We are prepared to execute fine Printing, of every description, in the best style of the art, and at very reasonable prices. Samples shown. Estimates given.

Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to painters; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC, and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth, Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

TRADE MARK
BEAUTIFUL & DURABLE

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance to which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either inside or outside work or boat painting than any other Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use.
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.

Liberal Inducements to Dealers.

POETRY.

UNDER THE WILLOWS.

'Neath the willows by the mill-stream with the summer sun above,
Its gold light above me beaming, I am dreaming of my love;
'Neath the green leaves, 'neath the brookside willow tree,
I am dreaming of my true love; doth my true love dream of me?

They call me a fair beauty, say mine eyes make other's dim;
If I glory in that beauty, 'tis for him, it is for him!
He calls me the bright lodestar, the bright jewel of his life;
Doth he think it will be Eden to me to be his wife?

My darling, oh, my darling, the world may call me fair;
But take me to thy heart, love, and hold, oh, hold me there!
Mine eyes to thine, dear, looking—my head upon thy breast;
So shall we build together our sweet, our own home nest!

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE NEW CASHIER.

"Well, my dear, what is this dreadful affair about poor Williams?"

"What affair?" repeated her spouse, who, seated in a most delightfully comfortable chair, was solacing himself with a new review. "What affair?" he repeated, looking at her from under his spectacles, in great astonishment.

"Why, you know as well as I do," returned the lady, pettishly; "what you were talking to Mr. Day about, this afternoon."

The bank director gazed in still increasing wonder.

"When Maggie was on the steps," added his wife.

"Oh!" said he, returning, with a low laugh, to his book, "it was nothing."

"Now you need not tell me so," answered his wife; "it was something, and I insist upon knowing what."

Mrs. Lindsey's "insists" were by no means terrifying. He replied, therefore, quietly: "My dear, it is impossible for me to tell you; it was a secret confided to me."

Then there is something, thought she, triumphantly, although silent at the last speech. Mrs. Lindsey walked about the next day with the important air of a person who made a discovery. She looked preternaturally wise and fearfully, even while washing the breakfast cups, and expiring with impatience for the arrival of the afternoon. She went over as soon after dinner as it was decent, to pass it with her friend and neighbor, Mrs. Vernon. This lady had not been her friend and neighbor for so many years without discovering the infallible signs and symptoms of a secret; so she sat determined not to take the slightest hint, or betray the least curiosity, being a very sure way, she very well knew, of nipping the intended disclosure in the bud. She permitted Mrs. Lindsey to run on till she had exhausted herself, in such like truisms: "How distressing it is to be deceived in any one you have respected and liked;" "Well, truth is stranger than fiction;" "What a world we live in;" "Certainly one learns new things every day;" "I never was more surprised in my life than I was yesterday." This looked like coming to the point, so Mrs. Vernon raised her eyes and began to appear interested. "But," said Mrs. Lindsey, drawing back her head (as she perceived the movement) with no little dignity, "one must keep some things to one's self." Mrs. Vernon looked down on her knitting, and began talking of indifferent matters. Nothing could be more becoming. Piqued at her affected lack of curiosity, Mrs. Lindsey, in a sort of spite, made the disclosure.

"I can never look at him again without horror and disgust," exclaimed Mrs. Vernon, after a moment of breathless astonishment. "Who could believe it? Such an agreeable, handsome young man, but Satan knows well enough where to choose his servants."

"I really thought it was my duty to tell you," continued Mrs. Lindsey, gratified beyond measure at the effect she had produced, "for he has been so very polite, you know, to your daughter Gertrude, and now, of course"—

"Of course," interrupted her friend, "she shall have nothing more to say to him."

"I would not cut him dead, my dear," exclaimed Mrs. Lindsey in some alarm, "for nothing more of this is to come out, you understand. My husband, Dr. Day, and all of them, it appears, have determined to conceal it, and as the young man has behaved very well since his arrival here, we must on no account rake up this old matter."

"Oh! certainly; I shall say nothing, you may depend upon it," answered her companion, "except to warn Gertrude, and insist upon her discouraging his attentions and treating him with great coolness. What can he have done?" she exclaimed, after a moment's pause.

"That is more than I can tell," answered Mrs. Lindsey. "The words certainly give one's imagination free scope. I have thought of everything, and really could not sleep last night for distress and fear. I imagined him gliding into the bank with false keys and shaded lantern, and perhaps setting fire to it afterward for the purpose of concealing his depredations; which, as we live so near, you know, would be anything but pleasant. Sometimes I think there were defalcations in the accounts, and he threatened to kill Mr. Bennett, who perhaps discovered it, if he betrayed him. Then again, I do not know but he has killed somebody."

Mrs. Vernon's face reflected every variety of horror.

"There he is," she almost shrieked, looking out of the window; "he is coming here."

Both ladies rose hurriedly, the first impulse being to run and lock the door, but as Mr. Williams did not display any belligerent intention, but walked with a very quiet and composed air up the steps and rang, Mrs. Vernon contented herself with ordering the servant to say that "Miss Gertrude was engaged."

This proceeding occasioned no slight disappointment and surprise to both Mr. Williams and the lady of his love, who, with beating heart and blushing face, had from an upper window witnessed his approach. She had glanced in the glass to ascertain just how pretty she was looking, then stood awaiting momentarily a summons down. But she was deceived. The hall door closed, and the servant retreated again to her quarters.

No message, book or note—what could it mean?

"Mamma," she exclaimed, after waiting an impatient half hour for Mrs. Lindsey's exit, "Mr. Williams called here this afternoon, and was not admitted—what does it mean?"

"Do not speak of him, my dear," returned her mother, with vehemence, "wretch that he is."

"Why, what is the matter?" answered her astonished auditor, a slight tremor in her voice alone betraying her agitation, for the darkened room concealed the pallid cheek, and wild, startled expression in the soft, blue eyes. Mrs. Vernon repeated the conversation which had just taken place, filling her daughter's mind with the same mysterious, undefined suspicions which agitated her own, and concluded by commanding her not to glance, talk or think anything more of Mr. Frank Williams.

Mr. Frank Williams, the victim of these machinations, was one of those universally popular and happily constituted characters who take everywhere, with young and old, grave and gay. His peculiarly fascinating exterior had, of course, something to do with this, but more than all, a never ending flow of good spirits and amiability, or suaviloquence, as phrenologists would term it, which possesses an irresistible attraction.—This much vaunted quality made him play, romp, and make himself as ridiculous as they could desire with children, just as he could listen with the most deferential and interested attention to the long, dull harangues of their papas and mammas.

His bow to his lady love, Miss Gertrude Vernon, was the perfection of courtesy and grace, so it was to poor old Mr. Anderson, who sold books and pamphlets at the little shop on the corner of the street. The very attendants at the large house where he boarded had wings when he was to be served. Yes, Mr. Frank Williams was, or rather had been, a universal favorite. But, lo! a wonderous change. The pleasurable flutter, agitation and smiles, which were wont to mark his approach at parties, all had disappeared, and in their place he beheld a sullen and ominous gravity and shrinking. Young ladies instead of being "most happy," were "engaged," or "fatigued," or "just going home," when he asked them to dance.—Miss Cornelia Wendell no longer declared she could not think of singing without an accompaniment, and glanced a pair of most coquettishly beautiful eyes, significantly as she spoke. No! she did not accept them when he tendered his services. The pretty widow, Mrs. Harcourt, no longer seized his arm and carried him off captive, nolens volens, by way of shielding herself, as she proposed, from the attacks of that insufferable bore, her sexagenarian adorer, Mr. Mills. A mamma came up one evening and absolutely took her daughter off without preface or apology, who was hesitating, blushing and "believing that her father was going home with her," when Mr. Williams requested that honor. There were no more little suppers and family dinners for him at Mrs. Lindsey's, and little Maggie not only refused in the most dignified manner to be caressed and played with, but dashed over the other side of the street, whenever she saw him coming, in evident perturbation and alarm. The gay, merry, flattering world had changed amazingly for Mr. Frank Williams; nods and becks, and wreathed smiles," all vanished; he began to doubt whether he was himself. To complete his desperation, the lady of his love had waned from timid delight to chill indifference, and from chill indifference to cold contempt, proposing in the full luxuriance of which last he received a most emphatic and indignant "No!" for his trouble. Mr. Williams confided some of his distressing sensations to his friend, Mr. Lindsey, who confided them to his wife, and wondered what the deuce had got into the people, particularly that silly little girl, Gertrude Vernon, for treating a fine, gentlemanly fellow like Williams in such a scandalous manner.

Mrs. Lindsey said nothing, but thought a great deal; her woman's heart failed within her for fear, and over her pillow that night flitted visions of suits for slander and defamation, courts and costs, mingled with those of a justly infuriated husband, and the new cashier's handsome person extended at full length with his brains blown out. On considering the matter the next day, however, there was a possibility that some one else might have done the mischief, and without betraying herself she determined to proceed, in the most diplomatic manner possible, to the discovery of this fact. At a small party where Mr. Frank Williams was not, she seated herself by Mrs. Maxwell, a charming young married lady and friend of his, who had remained cordially true and kind amidst the valley of cold looks and icy greetings by which the unfortunate youth had been assailed.

"What can be the reason," exclaimed Mrs. Lindsey, with a wonderfully ignorant and sympathizing air, "why that agreeable young man, Mr. Williams, is not here to-night?"

"He was not invited," replied her auditor, coldly, with most suspicious brevity.

"Not invited?" echoed Mrs. Lindsey, as if she really could not credit the full horror of the fact, of which, by the way, she was aware before. Her companion made no reply, and Mrs. Lindsey begun on another tack. "I do not think he is as great a favorite as when he first came here." Still no answer, and Mrs. Lindsey, who did not find this "monologueing" particularly agreeable, turned to her silent auditor, and exclaimed: "What can be the reason?"

"I should imagine you would know, Mrs. Lindsey," answered the lady, at length, with no little indignation, "for it was something that you told Mrs. Vernon, and Mrs. Vernon told Mrs. Fisher, and Mrs. Fisher told her cousin Mrs. Wells, and she told Mrs. Davis, and she told—nobody knows who; suffice it to say, that every man, woman and child in this place has heard the 'something,' and it is doing a deserving young man incalculable injury and ruining his prospects in every way.

"What will become of me?" thought Mrs. Lindsey, in an agony, as she walked home that night. "Oh! that treacherous Mrs. Vernon, when I told her in all friendliness, too, entirely on her daughter Gertrude's account, and she promised me that she would never speak of it again!"

Early the next morning she sallied into Mrs. Vernon's and asked, with quivering lips and ashy cheek, whether she had mentioned "that affair" about Mr. Frank Williams to any one.

Her friend looked excessively frightened and silly herself for a moment or two, then acknowledged that she "had spoken of it to Mrs. Fisher, but she was sure she had not told—she would go and see her without delay."

"But she has though," replied Mrs. Lindsey, with the energy of despair; "she told her cousin Mrs. Wells, and Mrs. Wells told Mrs. Douglass, and Mrs. Douglass told Mrs. Davis, and it is all over town."

Nothing except Mrs. Lindsey's consternation could equal Mrs. Vernon's. But a drowning man catches at a straw.

"There may be some mistake," she replied, "at all events I'll go and see Mrs. Fisher this afternoon."

"How could you, Mrs. Fisher," began Mrs. Vernon, "tell that affair about Mr. Williams, which I confided to you under the strictest injunctions of secrecy?"

Mrs. Fisher looked up at the ceiling, down on the floor, and out of the window, and gathering courage, doubtless, from the survey of these prospects, said, in a faltering tone, "that she had only told cousin Mrs. Wells, who was very prudent, and never mentioned anything."

"But she has not been very prudent this time," answered Mrs. Vernon, with no little acrimony, "for she has told Mrs. Douglass, who has told Mrs. Davis, who informed the whole town, I imagine, for everybody knows it."

Not half an hour elapsed before Mrs. Fisher's hat and cloak were on, and she was in Mrs. Wells' parlor.

"Lucy," she exclaimed, when she met her cousin, "how could you tell anybody what I told you about Mr. Frank Williams? I certainly thought that in mentioning a thing to you I was safe—I would no sooner have trusted it to a dumb woman—what possessed you to tell this?"

"I did not exactly tell it," answered Mrs. Wells, with a crimson face, "or rather, I have no idea of betraying confidence. Mrs. Douglass said something, from which I had no doubt that she knew all about it, and answering her with this idea, of course, very innocently, made in some measure the disclosure, then concluded it would be more prudent to tell her all and bind her to secrecy."

"Which she has not kept," said Mrs. Fisher, "for she has told Mrs. Davis, who has told the whole town, I suspect, for everybody knows it, and it is making a great deal of trouble."

"I am very sorry," answered Mrs. Wells. "What can I do? Shall I go and see Mrs. Douglass?"

"Yes, by all means; put on your things now, and then come to our house and tell me what she says," replied her cousin.

Mrs. Wells was a timid woman, and it took her some time to broach the subject.

"You remember what I told you about Mr. Williams?" she said, at length, in a low, confused tone.

"Yes," answered Mrs. Douglass, with the most composed air in the world.

"Did you ever tell any one—Mrs. Davis?" stammered poor Mrs. Wells, feeling like the victim herself.

"No!" answered Mrs. Douglass, "Mrs. Davis told me."

"Is it possible?" said her auditor, in a delighted surprise. "How did she hear it?"

"It was the same story; it came from Mrs. Lindsey," answered her friend. "She told Mrs. Allen, who told Mrs. Johnson, who told Mrs. White, who told Mrs. Davis, and she told me."

"Indeed!" said Mrs. Wells, with an astonished expression of countenance peculiar to herself. "Indeed!"

What a racing and chasing was there that livelong afternoon about "that affair" of Mr. Frank Williams. What a commotion in eight or ten feminine hearts (married ones too) of which he was most unwittingly the cause. Purple, brown and stone colored cloaks were dodging each other in all directions, and after explanations and re-explanations by scores, everybody shook their hands free of the matter, voting that Mrs. Lindsey was the guilty person, on whom retribution should fall. She (unfortunate woman) was sitting quietly at home in pleasing ignorance of all this commotion, when Mrs. Vernon, with a peculiarly pursed-up expression of countenance, came in. Never since the memory of man, or woman either, had her friend and neighbor looked so awfully solemn and rigidly severe. Mrs. Lindsey had not heart or voice enough to bid her "good evening;" she merely motioned her to a seat, and gazing steadfastly at her, waited for her to begin.

"I am surprised, Mrs. Lindsey," at length said the lady, "at your attacking me with making public that story about Mr. Williams, when you have informed everybody else of it, as well as myself." Still, Mrs. Lindsey said nothing; she merely looked for a further explanation.

"You told Mrs. Allen," said her companion, in reply to the look, "and she told Mrs. Johnson, and"—

"I told Mrs. Allen!" gasped Mrs. Lindsey, at length; "I never told any one but you."

"What! not one Sunday, coming from church?" A sudden light glanced upon poor Mrs. Lindsey.

"But I did not tell her anything," answered she; "I merely hinted at something."

"Well! that is the amount of it," said her friend; "it is a hint at something with all of us, and none of us know what it means; and I, for my part, am inclined to think the whole affair is but a child's nonsense, magnified by a very timid, nervous woman."

And with this neighborly speech upon her lips, Mrs. Vernon departed. This was by no means the last of Mrs. Lindsey's troubles that evening, for her lord and master came home at nine o'clock in a towering passion about the same matter. It appeared that on being interrogated by Mr. Frank Williams as to the cause and occasion of the offense he appeared to have given people in general, his friend, Mr. Maxwell, had told him that it was something which came through Mrs. Lindsey, which she had heard from her husband; and what the "something" was, she nor nobody else knew. Convinced that there was some mistake, for Mr. Williams was not apt to suspect his friends, and Mr. Lindsey he knew was his friend, he hastened to that gentleman and asked an explanation. For a moment Mr. Lindsey was bewildered; he was as ignorant as Williams himself; but a thought of Maggie and his wife's suspicions on that evening flashed across him.

"My dear fellow," he exclaimed, "I am distressed that this has happened. I understand perfectly what it is; all nonsense—silly women, silly women."

And he raced home, leaving his auditor, if possible, more astonished than he had found him. Mr. Lindsey was really furious, and his meditations on the way home as to all Williams had suffered in consequence of his wife's gossip did not serve to calm his feelings.

"And so, my dear," said he, as he dashed into the room, "you've been making a pretty dish for yourself."

Mrs. Lindsey heard in silence, while her spouse walked up and down the room wondering how women came to be such fools and his wife such a particular one, and concluded by striding up to his terrified helpmate and asking her "what he was to say to Williams for all her confounded nonsense?"

"But he has done something dreadful; you know he has," she sobbed, at length, by way of a palliation.

"What do you mean?" said her husband, sternly.

"You told Day, yourself," she continued, in an agony of tears.

"Yes, I told him," replied her husband, "that Bennett's silly daughter chose to fall in love with Williams, and as her flame evidently was not returned, her father was very glad of an opportunity of getting him out of the way before the girl made a fool of herself. This was confided to me as a secret, which was the reason I did not tell you at the time, for I know very well what a secret is in the hands of a woman—the whole race—even my little Maggie can keep nothing to herself."

In spite of this taunting speech, his tone softened, and Mrs. Lindsey gained courage.

"I am sorry, my dear," said she, "that I have made so much mischief, but there is no use groaning over it now. I'll endeavor to mend it as far as possible. I'll tell everybody that it was a mistake of mine, and take the blame on my own unfortunate shoulders; besides saying everything necessary and appropriate to Williams himself."

A week from that night did Mrs. Lindsey make as many graceful and apologetic remarks as she could well muster to Frank Williams, and little Maggie shower down kisses and tears innumerable on his cheeks. He went from there to a party where all the young ladies in town lavished on him their brightest smiles and most particular attentions; not omitting even Miss Gertrude Vernon, whose lovely blue eyes followed him with such a bewitching and bewildering interest that he could not forbear whispering:

"You'll not refuse to permit me to escort you home?"

"Certainly not, Mr. Williams," she replied, with a blush and a smile.

"Never, never, will I repeat anything that I hear again," was Mrs. Lindsey's concluding exclamation that evening—"particularly to that good-for-nothing Mrs. Vernon," she added, mentally.

PETER LAMB'S BET.

Some time ago, during a religious controversy between Peter Lamb and some of his friends, one of the latter asserted that Peter didn't know who was the mother-in-law of Moses, and that he couldn't ascertain. Peter offered to bet that he could find out, and the wager was accepted. After searching in vain through the Scriptures Mr. Lamb concluded to go around and interview Deacon Jones about it. The deacon is head man at the gas office, and in the office there are half-a-dozen windows, behind which sits clerks to receive money.—Applying at one of these, Mr. Lamb said;

"Is Deacon Jones in?"

"What's your business?"

"Why I want to find out the name of Moses's——"

"Don't know anything about it. Look in the directory!" and the clerk slammed the window shut.

Then Peter went to the next window and said:

"I want to see Mr. Jones a minute."

"What for?"

"I want to see if he knows Moses's——"

"Moses who?"

"Why Moses, the Bible Moses—if he knows——"

"Patriarchs don't belong in this department. Apply across the street at the Christian Association rooms," and then the clerk closed the window.

At the next window Mr. Lamb said:

"I want to see Deacon Jones a minute in reference to a matter about Moses."

"Want to pay his gas bill? What's the last name?"

"Oh, no. I mean the first Moses, the original one."

"Anything the matter with his meter?"

"You don't understand me. I refer to the Hebrew prophet. I want to see——"

"Well, you can't see him here. This is the gas office. Try next door."

At the adjoining window Mr. Lamb said:

"Look here, I want to see Deacon Jones a minute about the prophet Moses, and I wish you'd tell him so."

"No, I won't," replied the clerk. "He's too busy to be bothered with anything of that kind."

"But I must see him," said Peter. I insist upon seeing him; I've got a bet about Moses——"

"Don't make any difference what you've got, you can't see him."

"But I will. I want you to go and tell him I'm here, and that I wish for some information respecting Moses. I'll have you discharged if you don't go."

"Don't care if you want to see him about all the children of Israel and the Pharaohs, and Nebuchadnezzars. I tell you, you can't. That settles it. Turn off your gas and quit."

Then Peter resolved to give up the deacon and try Rev. Dr. Potts. When he called at the parsonage the doctor came down into the parlor. It is the doctor's misfortune that he is very deaf, and there was a little misunderstanding when Peter said:

"I called, doctor, to ascertain if you could tell me who was the mother-in-law of Moses."

"Well, really," said the doctor, "there isn't much preference. Some like one kind of roses and some like another. A very good variety of the pink rose is the Duke of Cambridge: grows larger, bears early and has a very fine perfume. The Hebenica is also excellent; but you must manure it well, and water it often.

"I didn't ask about roses but Moses. You make a mistake," shouted Peter.

"Oh, of course! by all means. Train them up to a stake if you want to. The wind don't blow them about so, and they send out more shoots."

"You misunderstand me," yelled Mr. Lamb. "I asked about Moses, not roses.—I want to know who was the mother-in-law of Moses?"

"Oh, yes! certainly. Excuse me. I thought you were inquiring about roses.—The law of Moses was the foundation of the religion of the Jews. You can find it in full in the Pentateuch. It is admirable; very admirable for the purpose for which it is ordained. We, of course, have outlived that dispensation, but it still contains many things that are useful to us, as for instance the—"

"Was Moses married?" shrieked Mr. Lamb.

"Married? Oh, yes, the name of his father-in-law, you know, was Jethro, and——"

"Who was his wife?"

"Why, she was the daughter of Jethro, of course. I just said Jethro was his father-in-law."

"No; Jethro's wife, I mean. I want to know to settle a bet."

"No, that isn't her name. 'Bet' is a corruption of Elizabeth, and that name I believe is not to be found in the Old Testament. I don't remember what the name of Moses' wife was."

"I want to know what was the name of the mother-in-law of Moses, to settle a bet."

"Young man," said the old doctor, sternly, "you are trifling with a serious subject.—What do you mean by wanting Moses to settle a bet?"

Then Mr. Lamb rolled up a sheet of music that lay on the piano, and putting it to the doctor's ear, he shouted:

"I made—a—bet—that—I—could—find—out — what — the — name — of —Moses's—mother-in-law — was. Can — you — tell— me?"

"The Bible doesn't say," responded the doctor; and unless you can get a spiritualist to put you in communication with Moses I guess you will lose."

Then Peter went around and handed over the stakes. Hereafter he will gamble on other than Biblical games.—Max Adeler.

"THE SAME OLD DRUNK."

A big judge recently fined an old soak five dollars and costs for drunkenness, and gave him an admonition to get sober as speedily as possible. A couple of days after the same chap was again before him on another charge of the same kind, and again was he mulcted in the sum of five dollars and costs. After receiving sentence the prisoner fumbled in his pocket for a moment, as if fishing for the wherewithal to satisfy the demands of the outraged law, when a happy thought struck him:

"See here, Judge," said he, "you haint given me the square of this thing."

"Why, what's the matter?" was the judicial response.

"Just this," said the inebriate, "don't the Constitution of the United States say that you can't fine a man twice for the same offense?"

"I believe it does say something to that effect," answered the Judge.

The daughter of the forest stopped and eyed the questioner, and then pointing her finger at him said, earnestly, "him your papoose." There was considerable laughing from the bystanders, but they were not laughing at the squaw.

THE PEOPLES' CHOICE.

We want an enlightened and patriotic statesman for President of the United States, one who thoroughly understands our Constitutional system of government, and who will obey law and do his duty without fear, favor or procrastination.

Such a man is Samuel J. Tilden.

We want a President of the whole American Union, not a section of it, who will strive to confer the blessings of peace and good will upon all citizens, rich and poor, native and naturalized, white and black, and who will thrust aside the malignant spirit of strife and hatred.

Samuel J. Tilden will be that kind of President.

We want a President qualified and determined to reform long standing abuses, to stop official fraud, put an end to public waste and extravagance, and, through prudent economy and rigid accountability, to lessen the burden of taxation and augment national and individual prosperity.

His name is Samuel J. Tilden.

We want a President bold and energetic, who will drive away and keep far away the hordes of ring thieves and political cormorants now plundering the public Treasury and squandering the property of the people.

Samuel J. Tilden is the very man to do that.

We want a President practically familiar with business interests, and who will zealously devote himself to the task of removing the present deplorable and wide spread depression resting upon enterprise and labor.

The man for the crisis is Samuel J. Tilden.

We want a President who will stand faithfully at the post of official duty, Summer and Winter, and ridding the White House of tinsel show and military lackeys, will make it the plain residence of a civilian Chief Magistrate of a plain Republic.

Samuel J. Tilden will do that.

VOTE FOR TILDEN!

CAMPAIGN LIES.

Among the multitude of base slanders published by a mercenary press against Governor Tilden as a Presidential candidate, and reiterated from the mouths of unscrupulous partisans, his alleged fraudulent transactions with certain Railroad Corporations have formed a prominent topic.

Thousands of honest and honorable Republicans well know such charges to be wicked "campaign lies," and very many, not only openly express disgust with the course pursued by their party newspapers, but avow an intention of voting for Mr. Tilden, as the best possible citizen existing circumstances demand for President of the United States.

Mr. J. W. Hickok, of Burlington, Vermont, a declared Republican, but a truth-loving man, wrote the following letter, under date of Aug. 16th, to a friend in Boston.

Read it:

At a Republican meeting held in Burlington on the 12th inst., E. W. Stoughton, of New York, charged Gov. Tilden with dishonorable practices generally during the war. As reported by the Free Press of the 11th he said: "Tilden in that time continued the practice of his profession, and they were practices of a very peculiar kind, some he many reputable members of any profession declined to enter on—wrecking railroads." To those who know the two men it seems quite in keeping with the self-conceit and arrogance of Mr. Stoughton that he should, as he did during his speech, assume for himself a higher level of character than Governor Tilden. I cannot fancy to myself Chas. O'Connor or Wm. M. Evarts thus pluming themselves. With respect to integrity and a delicate sense of professional honor, Governor Tilden, in the judgment of the bar of New York, probably ranks as high, if not higher, than Mr. Stoughton. Neither that bar nor the public has forgotten that while Mr. Tilden, as one of the prosecutors of Tweed by his masterly analysis of the books of the Broadway Bank, secured evidence for his conviction, Mr. Stoughton was found among the defenders of A. Oakey Hall, a coadjutor of Tweed, and stated to the jury that he volunteered that defense on account of his warm friendship for the man. This speech of Mr. Stoughton and his announcement that he should stump it continuously during the campaign, have induced me to reconsider my refusal as expressed to you on the 10th ult. of your earnest request that I should write you my views of Mr. Tilden's railroad practice.

From 1858 to 1868 I resided in New York city, as Vice-President of a Western railroad, and held stock or bonds of three others during the period when they were all of them re-formed and re-organized under the advice and counsel of Mr. Tilden. Thus I became acquainted with him in such a way as to know pretty thoroughly his personal and professional character, and to get an insight into what Mr. Stoughton calls his peculiar practice of wrecking railroads.

The financial crisis of 1857 is well remembered for its great severity. There was a general suspension of Specie Payments by the banks, and Western railroad corporations, mostly built (or partly built) not for cash, but by sale of stock and bonds at a discount, almost every one of them west of the State of New York went to protest, and very many of them were in fact, by sale under mortgages, re-constructed upon a reduced capital. To any railroad corporation in such a condition of insolvency, a vital necessity is to find a man of such legal attainments, sound practical wisdom and integrity of character that the great mass of dissatisfied and discordant security-holders will unite in accepting his counsels and following his leadership in saving the common property and putting it in sound financial condition.

It was the good fortune of many of those corporations that they secured Mr. Tilden's services and were wise enough to follow his advice. Three prominent ones—corporations in which I was personally interested—were the Chicago and Northwestern, the St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute, and the Chicago and Alton railroads. The first of them now represents a capital of about $35,000,000, the second about $11,000,000, and the Chicago and Alton a capital of about $20,000,000, with its common stock at this date in demand in New York at 101¼. An immense addition to the value of these corporate properties resulted from their re-organization, probably not less than five-fold in either case, and their successful career for the past twelve years is well known to financial men all over the country. The work which Mr. Tilden did for these great corporations was to lift them out of the slough of bankruptcy, and place their property, greatly enhanced in value, in possession of their stockholders, and upon a stable basis of prosperity. And for many other corporations, as I am informed, Mr. Tilden did saving work of like kind.

Now, it is charged that he grew rich out of this business, he may well admit the fact and reply with truth that for every $10,000 he has received from the corporations he has added a million in value to their property. The charge that Mr. Tilden and the four other gentlemen who re-organized the Terre Haute and Alton road have stolen $300,000 or more of its stock and bonds falls to the ground before the clear and decisive answer of those gentlemen. This was what was expected of those who knew them. Mr. Tilden's functions in this business were mainly advisory; the active management of the new corporation fell chiefly upon Mr. Charles Butler, who was for many years president of the road, and Mr. Robert Bayard, both of New York City; gentlemen whose characters are above suspicion or reproach. Mr. Chas. Butler is one of the noblest of men. He would suffer his right hand to be burned to a cinder before he would touch a stolen bond or a stock certificate tainted with fraud.

As to the consolidation of the Galena and Chicago Railroad into what is now the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, the facts in brief are these: Parties in the interest of the latter road bought a majority of the Galena stock. Prominent among them was William B. Ogden, of New York, and for many years President of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company—this name alone is a sufficient guarantee that there was no fraud or swindle, actual or intended, upon anybody. Under the laws of Illinois a consolidation of the two properties was effected, and upon equitable terms. If there were any parties who suffered loss they were the persons who, at great expense, contested the validity of the consolidations for the purpose of getting an extra price for their own stock. They failed utterly, however; the work of consolidation, under the guidance of Mr. Tilden, has been too thoroughly done to be disturbed.

If there are any other allegations afloat in reference to frauds committed by Mr. Tilden as a railroad attorney, you may rest assured that they will not be based upon any evidence that is tangible, and such allegations you may safely set down as campaign lies.

* * * * * *

With much esteem, I am, very truly yours,
J. W. HICKOK.

Remember, that is the volunteered testimony of a gentleman personally acquainted with all the facts of the case, and who is now and ever has been a Republican in politics. He boldly and justly brands as "CAMPAIGN LIES," the partisan charges made against Samuel J. Tilden, the Democratic candidate for President. As with one so with all such slanders, they come from the same viper den of falsehood and will turn and sting their authors.

VOTE FOR TILDEN!

The election of Hayes would be in effect a third-term for Grant, which was the office-holders design, and the bare mention of which purpose created such an outburst of popular indignation all over the land.

Elect Hayes and the official frauds of Grantism will take new life, the flood gates of progidal expenditures be thrown wide open, and the people be made to suffer worse than ever.

A party that uses nothing but personal slanders for its campaign ammunition is in the last stage of political consumption. Its grave will soon be opened, and the eyes of honorable citizens will not be tear moistened because thereof.

"Give us a change of Administration. Business affairs cannot possibly be worse and a change may better them." That is the popular sentiment, growing stronger and stronger for Tilden and Hendricks.

What a complimentary set of fellows our Republican friends must be. Their nomination for Congress in this District proves it beyond the shadow of a doubt. They certainly deemed the election of the Democratic candidate a sure coming event.

Men out of employment, or laboring for almost starvation wages, don't want to hear about a war that was ended twelve years ago, nor do they relish the throwing of political mud at a gentleman whose whole official career shows him to be the real not the imaginary foe of public robbers. The Mechanics, Artisans and Workingmen will vote with great unanimity for TILDEN.

The lying types of the New York Times charged Governor Tilden with professional swindling as regards one or more Western Railroads. Truth shows that instead of wronging, through judicious, intelligent and laborious management, he rescued millions of invested property from ruin and made it remunerative to the owners. What a happy circumstance it would be for the poor stockholders in some Eastern Railroad to have a Governor Tilden take hold and convert their present dissolving shares into a paying reality!

The claim is boastingly made that the Grant Administration has reduced the public debt. How could it do otherwise, with the immense amount of money extorted from the people during the past eight years? We boldly assert, that had Samuel J. Tilden been President instead of U. S. Grant, with the same means at his disposal, and the economy and fatility, he would have forced into every branch of the public service, and the leaks and stealings he would have stopped, the country might to-day rejoice in a national debt many hundred million dollars less than it now is, and business be thriving under the invigorating effects of practical reform.

The Old Presbyterian Church was comfortably filled with people on Tuesday evening last, to listen to Mr. Atherton, candidate for Congress in the Third Congressional district, and Z. K. Pangborn. Mr. Atherton delivered an address which evidences that he is not a political speaker, and is more conversant with books and the education of the young, while Mr. Pangborn told a few funny stories, so the Times says, but did not tell his hearers anything about the monstrous corruption of the present Government, or of his own little difficulty with the same, which it is alleged is a defalcation while occupying the position of army paymaster, and the subsequent seizure of his property at Jersey City, which has been advertised for sale, to cover the discrepancy. If that is the kind of speeches the immaculate "moral" and "truely loil" party propose to talk for them this Fall, they will not make many converts.

HAYES' INCOME TAX.

And now it is another exemplification of what the man who lives in a glass house should not do. Governor Tilden it appears, so it was alleged, did not return a correct statement of his income for some particular year—the precise one we have forgotten, and forthwith the whole pack of Republican vilifiers were after him in full cry.

But while this proceeding was transpiring and the whole Republican press, swelling with virtuous indignation, were trumpeting their condemnations of this nefarious conduct to the country, a cunning reporter was delving and digging and rooting, &c., into the books of the Sandusky (Ohio) County Assessor, and what he discovered the Toledo Sunday Democrat, thus relates:

We give below the sworn returns of Gov. Hayes to the Assessor of Fremont for the years 1874–75–76, of his property for taxation, listed by himself, obtained by our reporter from the records in the county office of Sandusky Co.:

Statement of general property, moneys, credits, &c., subject to taxation in Sandusky County for year 1874, belonging to R. B. Hayes and listed by R. B. Hayes:

Total value of all items	$5,[illegible]

Here follows the formal oath of R. B. Hayes.

In publishing copies of sworn returns of Gov. Hayes, of his property for taxation, commenting upon discrepancies, omissions and irregularities in his statements under oath, we intend to keep within the record and facts, as can be shown by most irrefragible proof, as will be seen by reference to the return of Gov. Hayes for 1874. He returned moneys, credits, book accounts, household goods, &c., $1,000. The will of Sardis Birchard, admitted to probate Jan. 29, 1874, bequeathed R. B. Hayes fully $50,000 personal property, and as Gov. Hayes was the executor without bond, he became possessed of all the property devised to him by will at once. Birchard returned his personal property, exclusive of moneys, credits, notes, book accounts, &c., as $9,982 to the Assessor in April, 1873. Gov. Hayes, after having all Birchard returned, added what he owned previously and returned to the Assessor of Taxation in April, 1874, all his personal property not included in the seventeen enumerated items, $1,000. Was this perjury?

In March, 1874, previous to making his return to the Assessor, R. B. Hayes held mortgages and notes against J. E. Amsden for $4,000 interest at six per cent., payable annually, due in 1878, also against Edwin Van Dorn, Martin Moriarty, Wm. H. Andrews, and A. J. and Elizabeth Hale, amounting to $5,670, all bearing six per cent interest. He did not list this $9,675 for taxation, although he had held notes since 1874, previous to making his return that year. R. B. Hayes returned gold watch, $300, in 1874, and in 1875 and 1876 returned three watches, including one returned in 1874, at $200. Was this perjury? R. B. Hayes did not return a piano in any one of the three years, although he had one in his parlor all the time, and it is the boast of his admiring neighbors that the one now in his parlor cost $800. Was this perjury?

R. B. Hayes returned in 1875 and 1876 three horses, $300, when his neighbors know that he values one of his horses at $500. Was this perjury? R. B. Hayes returned in 1875 four carriages, $250, when it was well known to many of the citizens of Fremont that he paid Mr. Moore, a manufacturer of that city, $500 for them, and had a phaeton that cost $350. Was this perjury? Thirty-three thousand seven hundred dollars were left in his hands in bequests in the will of Sardis Birchard, which Gov. Hayes was not required to pay over for three years, and upon which he paid no interest for two years, and he did not return a single dollar of this money for taxation. At least he only returned $300 in hand in 1876. Was this perjury? In order to make this matter plain, that there can be no question about it, we give from the will of Birchard names of devisees to whom the $33,700 was given and the amount bequeathed to each:

I give and bequeath each of my nieces, Mary Birchard of Fayetteville and Charlotte Dewitt of Elyria, the sum of $5,000 each. I give and bequeath Sarah Jane Grant of Fremont, O., the sum of $5,000. I give and bequeath each of the four children of W. A. and F. A. Platt, viz., Laura, Fanny, Emily and Rutherford, the sum of $2,500 each. I give and bequeath to each of the six children of Austin S. Tyler, deceased, late of Fremont, O., $2,000. I give and bequeath to Chas. Birchard, son of my brother, Austin Birchard, of Vermont, the sum of $200 per annum during his natural life. It is my will, and I hereby direct that my executors shall not be compelled to pay any of the sums of money given and bequeathed by this will until the expiration of three years after my decease, but interest shall be paid on the same two years after my decease.

It will be observed that in the oath which R. B. Hayes subscribed he swore that he listed all property which by law he was required to return as owner or holder, or as husband, parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, accounting officer, agent, attorney or factor. He held amounts we have given from the will devised by Birchard in his possession as executor, and made no return of any portion of money or personal property for taxation. Was this perjury?

The excuse cannot be made that he owed debts to the amount which he deducted, for he could not deduct debts from money or credits which he held in executive capacity. It was not his money. He simply had possession of it as executor, and was bound by law to return it for taxation. He did not do it, but swore all the same that he returned all that he was required by law to list. Our reporter carefully searched records in the offices of Auditor, Recorder and Probate Judge, and ascertained that no return was made by Gov. Hayes or his co-executor.

The fact that Gov. Hayes received into possession large amounts of personal property of Sardis Birchard, consisting of household goods, valuable paintings, plate, watches, &c., all of which by law was taxable, and did not return it for taxation at more than one-tenth of its value, and did not return it at all in 1874, either as executor or as his own property, which undoubtedly it was, is too clear to admit of an escape from the charge of evading payment of taxes.

In attempting to explain the failure of Gov. Hayes to return money for the payment of bequests in the will for taxation, it will no doubt be claimed that he had not yet realized money from the sale of the property. It is all to be paid this year, and if he has not all the money to pay over, he undoubtedly realized some of it or has failed to execute the will. Two years and a half elapsed, and no report to the Probate Judge, as required by law, has been made either by Rutherford B. Hayes or his co-executor indicating the payment of any of the bequests, so that the presumption is that they are not yet paid.

DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY.

The Democrats of Plainfield Township met in the rooms of the Young Men's Tilden & Hendricks Reform Club Tuesday evening, to elect delegates to attend the State and Congressional Conventions, the first to be held at Trenton September 12, and the latter at Freehold," when called. The following named gentlemen were chosen as delegates to the State Convention: Wm. B. Maxon, Joseph W. Yates, James H. Clark, John G. Voorhees, John B. Brown, with James Vosseller, Wm. Gamble, James Parker, John C. Sutphen, and J. G. Cadmus, as alternates.

The delegates to the Congressional Convention were Julian Scott, W. L. Force, Edward P. Thorn, John C. Sutphen and John Jackson, with D. J. Marshall, E. C. Morse, E. R. Thiers, Wm. H. Voorhees and John Rafferty, as alternates.

The primary was called to order by Vice-President James Parker, with Wm. Gamble as Secretary. At the conclusion of the balloting Vice-President Wm. B. Maxson, in his impassioned and forcible manner, made a few well-chosen remarks, which were received with loud applause by the large and respectable gathering present. The Democracy of Plainfield are united and will give a good record of themselves in the approaching fight.

The election for Governor in Vermont on Tuesday, shows decided Democratic gains. At the present writing but 130 out of 250 towns have been heard from, but the indications are that there has been heavy gains for the Democracy. The World of to-day gives the following figures:

The 130 towns of which we speak gave in 1874 for the Republican ticket 72.8 per cent. of their voting strength. On this basis, having this year cast 45,768 votes, they should have given 33,319 votes for Fairbanks. They did give 31,184, a dead loss of 2,135 votes. In 1874 the Democrats had 27.2 per cent. of the votes of these towns; this year they have within a decimal of 32 per cent. Where in 1874 the Republicans put 100 votes into the box, this year they put in 133. Where the Democrats in 1874 put 100 votes into the box, this year they have deposited 173.

Let us suppose that the same ratio is preserved throughout the State. Then the total vote will be 69,400, which will divide, the Democratic share being 31.9 per cent., Democrats, 22,140; Republicans, 47,260; Republican majority, 25,120. Now we want it remarked that this will be more than 10,000 above any aggregate vote ever cast in Vermont, and that the Republicans will have exceeded their highest vote, that of 44,167 for President in 1868, by barely 3,000 votes, while the Democrats will have added no less than 6,500 votes to their highest display of strength, shown in the gubernatorial contest of 1872.

Arkansas went Democratic by an increased majority, on Monday last.

GOV. HENDRICKS' SPEECH.

Governor Hendricks addressed an immense meeting of from 10,000 to 12,000 persons at Shelbyville, Indiana, on Saturday the 2d inst. A report of his remarks, which was received with great enthusiasm, has appeared in all the daily papers, and has probably been read by most of our readers. We would urge those who have not read it, to do so. It is an able and thorough review of the course of the Republican party, and of the responsibility of the President for much of the disgrace which has been entailed on the country. The action of the Democratic House is examined and approved, and the necessity for a full and thorough reform in all branches of the government is shown and strongly insisted upon. Governor Tilden and his work in New York are commented upon and the people urged to give him a firm and united support in the coming election.

conform to salaries paid for competent like services out of public life.

8th. Less federal centralization and more respect for the rights of the people.

10th. Let the common schools alone.

11th. No federal interference with religious faith, sects or organizations.

12th. One term for the President, and a six years' service, if the Constitution is amended.

This is substantially what the Democrats are fighting for, and their candidates, if elected, will insist upon these reforms.—Evening Express, of August 22, 1876.

It is folly for the Republican outs to expect office under Mr. Hayes should he, unfortunately for the country, be elected President. Hayesism would be Grantism prolonged another four years, with every present incumbent, good, bad and indifferent, holding over.

The attacks on Governor Tilden are like surf waves breaking on the beach. They expend themselves in froth and noise, and return to the ocean from which they came. There is an ocean of malice and slander afloat against our candidates now, but its clamor only serves to make more evident the impregnability of the rocks against which its force is spent.

IT is a popular fallacy to suppose that a young lady's teeth are the less pearly and her lips the less ruby because her breath is fraught with the fragrance of the unfortunate onion.

PLAINFIELDERS visiting New Brunswick may be sure of a welcome reception at Geo. F. Crater's New Brunswick Hotel, opposite the depot. Mr. Crater is a veteran hotel keeper, is genial, accommodating, and understands the art of pleasing his guests.

MR. MULFORD ESTIL, Stationer, Front St., opposite Cherry, is now prepared to supply the citizens of our city with anything in his line of business. His stock is large and complete, and customers patronizing Mr. E. will find him liberal in his charges and upright and honorable in his dealings.

Mr. Edward Chamberlain has one of the finest graperies on his property near Westfield, that can be found in this section of the State. Ed. is always ready to entertain his friends in a princely manner when they call upon him. The latch-string may always be found on the outside of his door.

ON Saturday next, 9th inst., Rev. Mr. Schneider, pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church of this city, will open a free German School for the education of German children, and will continue the same every Saturday. School hours from 9 to 12 and from 1 to 5 o'clock. School room in the church.

DEMAREST, the Grocer, is a large dealer, and buys his goods right from headquarters, so that he can afford to sell them at low figures. The number of customers to be seen in his establishment nights, and the number of delivery wagons required to daily deliver goods sold by him is sufficient evidence that he is well patronized.

OUR friend Chapin, the painter, has retired from business, (that is the painting business) and has opened an oyster and lunch room on Somerset St., adjoining Heidelolf's Hotel, where he will be pleased to see the hungry and thirsty (that is if they drink soda) as Chape keeps a strictly temperance house. Give him a call.

WE are now about entering upon the most delightful season of the year. From this time until the middle, and often to the end of November, the weather is superb. The nights are long and cool, the days are short and generally bright and invigorating, and all the fullness of the earth tempts the appetite and strengthens the system.

ON next Sunday evening, Sept. 10, the Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will preach the opening sermon of a course entitled—"Reasons why we believe in the Bible." These discourses will be illustrated upon the blackboard. All are invited to attend the services, which will commence at quarter before 8 o'clock.

THE sale of Furniture, &c. by public auction, at Caspar's warerooms on Second St., last Tuesday, was well attended, and the prices obtained for goods very fair. Mr. Hugo Wiegmann, upholsterer, on Front St., between Peace and Church streets, was a large purchaser, and the old customers of Mr. Caspar are recommended by that gentleman to transfer their custom to him.

A STRANGER, about 25 years of age, 5 feet 9 inches in height, light mustache, dressed in light clothes, hired a horse and buggy from Heidelolf's stables on Wednesday, Sept. 6th, since which time nothing has been heard of either man or horse. The horse is 15½ hands high, 7 years old, white hind feet, sore on neck. The buggy is a leather-top, painted black, with fine yellow stripe and has four new spokes in off hind wheel. Information may be sent to Capt. Breen, Plainfield, N. J.

WASHINGTON ROCK is becoming quite noted as a place affording great relief to those afflicted with asthma and hay fever. There being absolutely no dew on that mountain height and the atmosphere being pure and dry guests from the White Mountains and the Catskills stopping there describe the place as possessing some advantages for those so afflicted, over both these famous localities. Residents of this State may be congratulated that they have so near at home a place capable of alleviating the terrors of those two afflictions which make their appearance at this season of the year. Henry Ward Beecher goes every year to the Twin Mountain House to escape the hay fever disease. We would suggest that he try the atmosphere of New Jersey on this high point, and see if it does not accomplish the relief afforded by that of New Hampshire.

State Agricultural Society.

This Society is a State institution in the broadest sense of the term. It has labored earnestly for the last twenty years, for the elevation and enlightenment of the husbandman's calling. In a hundred different ways we could point out where the fruits of these years of labor have been productive of the most beneficial results. There is no one now who questions the fact that our farmers, gardeners and fruit growers, follow a better and more profitable system of tillage than their fathers, and it is to the State Society and its practical teaching that these improved methods may be traced.

The annual exhibitions of the State Agricultural Society are always excellent schools of instruction, where men, engaged in similar pursuits, bring together, once a year, their best products, and compare notes, on a common meeting ground, where they can see what others are doing in different sections of the State. The eighteenth annual show of this Society will open at Waverly Fair Grounds on the 18th inst., and continue for five days. The cash premiums are more numerous and liberal than ever before, and sum up in round numbers to $12,000. We are assured by the officials that some of the departments will be crowded. We hope none of our readers will neglect sending whatever they may have worthy to this exhibition, so that outsiders may see the capabilities of our soil, and the wide and varied range of the products.

Within the enclosure, which nature has done so much to beautify, the visitor is sure to find some of the best breeds of horses, neat cattle, sheep, swine and poultry. There is always a large display of new and improved farm implements. Besides these and other attractions in the domestic department, there will be fruits, flowers and vegetables—not quite as large this year as formerly, owing to the severity of the drought. Aside from these practical and useful displays, that always interest farmers, there will be some fine trials of speed on the track by Jersey bred horses every day during the exhibition. On Thursday, the 21st, at 3 o'clock p. m., the "Tournament" will open, and the Sir Knights will ride for the "Champion State Cup," and the next day, at the same hour, there will be a similar contest for four handsome testimonials. These will be awarded to the successful candidates on the spot by Gen. Judson Kilpatrick, who will be the Grand Marshall on the occasion.

The President of the United States will visit the grounds during the exhibition, and both political candidates for the same office are expected to be there. On Friday there will be a grand parade on the track of all the prize animals, and in the afternoon of the same there will be an address in the fruit tent.

We can conscientiously urge our readers to visit Waverly during the Fair, and we feel certain that in doing so they will get the full worth of their money in pleasure and profit.

Trotting.

There will be a fine trot on the ground of the Plainfield Driving Park next Thursday, Sept. 14th, for horses that have never beaten 2,40. Entries close to-morrow (Friday) night at Campbell's Club House. This trot is guaranteed to be the best of the season.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

The Democracy of North Plainfield met at Keller's Hall on Monday evening, Sept. 4th, in large numbers for the purpose of organizing a Tilden & Hendricks Reform Club. The meeting was called to order by C. H. Van Nuise, who read the call, and called for the nomination of a chairman for the evening. Mr. L. L. Martin was chosen chairman, who stated the object of the meeting. Mr. John A. Thickstun was elected President, L. B. Boice, Vice Pres., L. L. Martin, Treasurer, Chas. H. Van Nisse, Sec., Geo. Hartfelder, Ass't. Sec. The following were elected the Executive Com.: Elisha Coriell, J. B. Hurlbert, S. O. Horton, Wm. McNabb, Jr., Jas. Verdon, John Bodine, Maj. Gadown. Some eighteen or twenty of our old well-tried Democrats were elected Honorary members of the club, along with seventy of our younger Democrats, who enrolled their names. The Democrats of North Plainfield are now organized, and mean to roll up a large majority in the coming election for Tilden and Hendricks. "The Union must and shall be Reformed!"

At last that sidewalk in front of our friend Newt. Spencer's store, is to be laid. A neat and substantial blue stone flag walk is to be laid the entire length of the property of Mr. Spencer and Mr. John Becker, on Somerset Street, which will be a great improvement when completed.

We are sorry to learn that our old friend Esquire James Verdon, was taken suddenly ill while attending church and had to be taken to his home in a carriage. He, however, is better at this writing.

James K. Arnold was last Monday evening elected a School Trustee in place of Jacob Kriney, whose term of office has expired.

Gazelle steamer No. 1 on Friday afternoon last tried the capacity of the new fire well recently constructed by A. Berry, Esq., on his premises adjoining the brook, with good satisfaction. The well contains seven feet of water and is five feet in diameter.

Mr. John Spencer is macadamizing the roadways and walks around his handsome villa on the mountain side back of Scotch Plains.

The Chairman of the County Executive Committee of Somerset, has issued a call for primaries to be held in the various townships of Somerset County to elect delegates to attend the State Electoral Convention at Trenton, Sept. 12th. The primary for North Plainfield will be held at Demler's Hotel Saturday, Sept. 9th.

The new stone arch bridge over Stony Brook at the intersection of New Grove and Somerset Streets, is rapidly nearing completion under the supervision of Messrs. Potter & Austin, contractors.

The Washington Valley Stone Quarry, leased by Laurence Austin, contractor, is now producing building stone of superior quality, the workmen being enabled to work more advantageously in consequence of a drain having been constructed to run the water away from the quarry.

DUNELLEN DOTTINGS.

Mr. Alonzo DeCamp has purchased the hotel property now occupied by Mr. Wm. Hughson, and known as the "Dunellen Hotel."

Mr. Wm. Hughson, who keeps the "Dunellen Hotel," knows how to administer to the wants of his guests in a proper manner. His house is a well-kept one.

Mr. Theophilus Stout, builder, has superseded Mr. Baldwin in the building line, the latter gentleman having left Dunellen. Mr. Stout is an able workman and has all the work he can attend to.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting of the Democratic and Liberal voters of the Township of Westfield, was held in Brocksmith's Hall on Tuesday evening last, the occasion being the election of delegates to the State and Congressional District Conventions, and the formation of a Tilden & Hendricks Reform Association. The meeting was organized by the election of A. S. Clark, Esq., as chairman, and Jas. Clinton Bolton as secretary. Messrs. C. W. L. Martine, L. H. K. Smalley and Geo. Washington Pierson were elected to the State Electoral Convention, and Messrs. James Ritchie, Jas. Clinton Bolton and A. S. Clark delegates to the Congressional Convention, after which the T. & H. Associat'n was organized, with the following named gentlemen duly elected as its officers: Pres.—S. S. Mapes, Esq.; Vice Pres.—Messrs. A. S. Clark and Geo. Washington Pierson; Sec'y—Jas. Clinton Bolton; Treas.—Sam'l M. Foster; Executive Com.:—Messrs. W. H. Clark, J. D. French and James Moffett; Com. on Constitution and By-Laws—Messrs. Chas. R. Clark, J. M. C. Marsh and Wm. Scitt. A large number signed the T. & H. roll. Speeches were made by Messrs. A. S. Clark, Mapes, Smalley, Bolton and others, and the meeting adjourned amid the utmost enthusiasm, subject to the call of the Pres.

At about 1 o'clock p. m. on Monday last, Mr. Lione Hatfield who resides midway between Westfield and Fanwood, discovered smoke and flames issuing from the shingle roof of the frame dwelling near "Peace's Crossing," and known as the "Sinclair House," and which at the time was occupied by a family by the name of Miller. Mr. H. hastened to the spot and notified the family who were in utter ignorance of the fire. After which he and other neighbors who had gathered at the scene, did what they could to save as much as possible of the household furniture, the fire being already beyond their control. The Westfield Fire Company were soon on hand, and worked manfully to save the outbuildings on the place, but of course could do nothing towards saving the house, as it was well-nigh burned down upon their arrival. The fire is supposed to have originated from sparks thrown upon the roof by a passing locomotive. The house, which was a good substantial building, was built about 18 years ago by Mr. Jacob D. French. It was owned by Mr. Sinclair of the New York Tribune, and we understand that there was only a small insurance upon it.

We are glad to learn that at the School Trustee election held in the Westfield district on Monday evening last, our staunch old Democratic friend, S. S. Mapes, Esq., was unanimously re-elected School Trustee, a position that he has held for several successive terms. Mr. Mapes is a sort of "veteran" in the "service," having not only served the district so long and faithfully, "without money and without price," but was one of the prime movers in that grand enterprise that secured to the village the spacious school edifice, which is its pride and boast, and to his untiring effort in securing and retaining a first-class Principal and an efficient corps of teachers is due in a great measure the eminent degree of success that has attended that enterprise, until at the present time the Westfield Public School ranks second to none of its class in the State.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

A considerable interest was manifested in the election of School trustees in this village on Monday evening, September 4th. It appears that about four months ago, Mr. Warren Ackerman being one of the trustees in that district, resigned the office, and thereupon the County Superintendent appointed Mr. Henry Kyte to fill the vacancy, until the annual election for trustees, which took place on the evening mentioned, and at which time another vacancy occurred by the expiration of the term of Mr. Norman Dunn, thus necessitating the election of two trustees at the same time. At precisely 8 o'clock the meeting was called to order and organized by the unanimous election of Geo. R. Nicholl, Esq., as chairman, and Mr. O. M. Putnam as secretary. Then after the reading of "reports" proceeded to election. The friends of Mr. Kyte and Mr. F. C. Gibbs, put these gentlemen in nomination, insisting that the interests of the School district would be best sustained by their election; while on the other hand a "respectable majority" thought differently, and that educational matters in that village would be equally safe in the hands of such representativemen as A. D. Shepard, Esq., and Mr. Norman Dunn, whom they put in nomination and elected by handsome majorities. The trustees elect are gentlemen of education and refinement, and we congratulate the district upon the efficiency and standing of their School board.

The regular weekly meeting of the Scotch Plains Tilden & Hendricks Reform Association will take place in their room, Dean's building, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 12th, at 7:30, sharp. Business of importance is to be transacted. Let all true Reformers be in attendance.

Mr. Brown also presented sundry bills as follows: P. Breen, Overseer of Poor, month of May, $16 67; J. S. Cutter, groceries, $99 50; Jas. M. Dunn, groceries, $45 23; D. Hand, board, $39 99; Geo. C. Owens, board, $50; H. H. Lowrie, M. D., services, &c., $42. On motion, these claims were referred to the Alms. Com.

Mr. Simpson presented the following Police claims: P. Breen, salary, &c., $57 81; S. F. Randolph, special, $24 57; Wm. Hedden, regular, 20 days' service, month of August, $27 60; J. R. Clark, regular, $41 67; Geo. Eaton, regular, $41 67. On motion, these claims were referred to Com. on Police.

Mr. Ryder, from Com. on Fire, Water & Lamps, reported claim of H. O. Walters, $19, and N. Y. Globe Gas Light Co., $207, correct. On motion, report was received, and claims referred to Aud. Com.

The Com. on Police reported the 5 Police bills presented this evening, correct, and on motion, they were referred to the Aud. Com.

Mr. Voorhees, from Com. on Printing, reported claim of W. L. Force & Bro., $42 85, correct. On motion, it was referred to the Aud. Com.

Mr. Voorhees, from Com. on Salaries, Offices & Elections, reported claim of J. S. Cutter, rent and gas, $77 11, correct. On motion, it was referred to the Aud. Com.

Mr. Brown, from Com. on Alms, reported correct the claims referred this evening. On motion, the same were referred to the Aud. Com.

Mr. Simpson, from Aud. Com., reported the following claims correct: H. O. Walters, $19; John Wilson, (2 bills) $176 07; J. C. Runyon & Co., $51 75; N. Runyon, (2 bills) $97 50; P. Breen, $57 81; Geo. Eaton, $41 67; W. L. Force & Bro., $42 85; S. F. Randolph, $24 57; Wm. Hedden, $27 60; J. R. Clark, $41 67; J. S. Cutter, $77 11. On motion, report was received, and warrants ordered drawn for same.

Mr. Simpson reported back claim of J. A. Hubbard as not correct. On motion of Mr. Brown, that the claim be referred back to the Com. on Salaries, Offices & Elections for correction, was adopted, Mr. Mulford voting no.

Mr. Thorn, from Com. on Laws & Ords., reported relative to claim of E. R. Pope, and others relative to survey of New St. sewer, that they find the claim was adjusted and allowed by a former Council, after a certain discount had been made, &c., leaving a balance due the claimants of $1,500; on which has been paid $800; the balance, with accrued interest, now amounts to $1,011 08, up to Sept. 1st, 1876; the Com. after an interview with the claimants, state that if the city will pay the accumulated interest now due on said claim, they will permit the principal to lay over for another year; and your committee would recommend that the proposal of the claimant be adopted. On motion, report was received and recommendation adopted.

Mr. Tier, from Com. on Licenses, reported favorably upon petition of Frederick Caspar to sell spirituous and fermented liquors, with a res. that the license be granted. On motion of Mr. Voorhees, that the report be received and res. adopted, was carried, Mr. Mulford voting no.

Mr. Brown offered a res. that William Swaim, Daniel J. Marshall and S. J. Burr, three judicious and disinterested citizens of the city of Plainfield, be appointed as Com'rs to make an estimate and assessment of the damages to property owners on Front St., between Grove St. and city line at Evona, in establishing the centre, curb and side lines of Front St., &c. On motion, res. was adopted, Mr. Voorhees voting no.

Mr. Brown also offered a res. that Wednesday, Oct. 4, 1876, at 8 o'clock P. M., and the Common Council chamber in the said city of Plainfield, be the time and place for said Com'rs to meet, &c. On motion of Mr. Brown, that the res. be adopted, was carried, Mr. Voorhees voting no.

Mr. Brown also offered another res. relative to the appointing of same Com'rs on Plainfield Ave., with a res. that Thursday, Oct. 5th, 1876, at 8 o'clock p. m., and the Council Chamber in the said city of Plainfield, the time and place for the Com'rs to meet, &c. On motion, the above two res. were adopted.

Mr. Simpson presented report of Capt. of Police for month of August: Number of arrests, 25; number of tramps entertained, 61. On motion, report was received and ordered on file.

Mr. Thorn presented a res. relative to the new polling district, that the Com. on Salaries, Offices & Elections confer with Com. relative thereto. Res. adopted.

Mr. Brown called from the table the 3d reading of the ord. to open Netherwood Ave. Ord. read 3d time and passed.

Council then adjourned to meet next regular meeting night in October, at 7½ o'clock.

COMMUNICATED.

For "The Constitutionalist."

MESSRS. EDITORS:

A short time since it was announced thro' the N. J. Central Times, that our esteemed citizen, Geo. Hoadley, Esq., was spending a few weeks with his family at East Hampton, Mass. In the Tribune of this (Monday) morning, speaking of a Democratic gathering at Shelbyville, Ind., is the following sentence: "The principal speaker was Gov. Hendricks, who was received with great enthusiasm, and was heartily welcomed to his native county. The other speakers were the Hon. Geo. Hoadley and Gen. Shields." The question has been naturally raised whether Geo. Hoadley, who has been for years a respected resident of our city and who had been supposed to be an honest uncompromising Republican, could so far change his principles as to have it announced through the press that he was rusticating among the Hampshire hills, while he was, in fact, pursuing an electioneering campaign through the Western States, and had become alienated from the principles he has formerly avowed, and espoused the Democratic cause. The subject has been discussed on the street to-day, and the conclusion is that if so, the reason has not been assigned. The question has been raised, if he has changed his views and espoused the Democratic cause, whether it is that he has come to the conclusion that the Party he has so ardently adhered to cannot succeed at the next election, and as he has retired from any active pursuit and become weary of a quiet life,—by such a change may obtain some office under the new administration? His friends profess to have no knowledge or intimation of such a change. We wait for more light. X. O. X.

GOVERNOR SEYMOUR'S LETTER.

The following is Governor Seymour's letter of declination:

MY DEAR SIR—The Democratic Convention which met last week, acting under misapprehension, put me in nomination for the office of Governor of this State. This its members would not have done if they had known the facts regarding my health. For many reasons I ought not to be their candidate. Duty demands that I should decline the proffered honor. While I am grateful for the friendly sentiments which prompted their action, my declination is compelled by obstacles which I cannot overcome. For some months my health has been infirm, and a recent illness has unfitted me for mental or physical exertions. My own opinion, confirmed by the judgment of my physicians, convinces me that I am unable at this time to perform the duties devolving upon the Governor of New York. I could cheerfully sacrifice my own purposes and feelings to meet the wishes of my friends. I would not hesitate to peril my health to uphold those principles in which I believe or to promote the public welfare; but I feel that I should sacrifice the interests of the party which placed me in nomination if I accept its action. Even the superior strength of the party with which I act could not elect a ticket with the known fact that its nominee for Governor was unequal to the performance of the labors of that office. I could not conscientiously enter upon them. I cannot do my friends the wrong of placing them in false positions by trying to do so. I therefore feel constrained to decline the nomination.

While it is a great sorrow to me that I cannot on this occasion meet the wishes of those to whom I am deeply indebted for so many favors, yet I am satisfied that my action will only subject them to some present inconvenience which, in the end, will prove to their advantage. It is not an unusual thing to have a vacancy upon the ticket nor a difficult matter to fill it.

THE ACTION OF THE CONVENTION.

In the main the action of the Convention will give confidence to our friends throughout the country. It removed the only cloud upon our political prospect. There was a fear that discordant organizations in Democratic strongholds would peril the success of the State and national ticket. The difficulties are all adjusted. The nominees were selected with the utmost harmony. The members separated with a confidence of victory. Unlike the rival Convention, there was no exultant majority, no wounded nor humiliated minority. The candidates who were not placed in nomination were not opposed for reasons reflecting upon their honor or which were lasting in their nature. While the Democratic party is emerging from its embarrassments its opponents are sowing the seeds of bitter controversy and strife. Even the exigencies of the Presidential election cannot restrain their harsh comments upon the men and measures of their own organization. I cannot think there is a doubt about the result of the pending contest. The Republicans demand the restoration of unqualified power in all branches of the general government, and this is done in the face of much that is condemned by thoughtful men of their own party. The change of a President will make no change with their ruling minds, with their prevailing organization, with their usages or policy. The warp and woof and texture of Republicanism will be the same under the Presidency of Grant or Hayes.—I wish to say no unkind word of either.

EXISTING EVILS AND THEIR REMEDY.

The evil which afflict our country do not spring so much from gross corruptions, for they can be laid bare and punished, but from the more subtle influence of prevading waste and extravagance. These will never be corrected except by the sharp conflict of parties. The election of a Democratic House of Representatives has led to many painful disclosures, but no good citizen doubts the value of these as checks to official abuses. Many reforms have been attempted by Republican officials which they would not have dared to enter upon if their party had not been confronted by a Democratic House which made exposures that compelled and enabled Republican officials to punish gross wrongs. Does any fair minded man doubt if, all opposition to the Republican party is crushed out, if every department is placed under its control, that those who hold extreme views will prevail in its councils? We have seen that one of their most cautious Senators has broached a violent and revolutionary plan with regard to the States. This was never done without consultation with his fellow members. The Republican speakers in the canvass appeal to the passions of their hearers in the spirit which prompted this revolutionary scheme. It is true that some of their journals protest against it. They belong to that class which are unheeded except in times of great peril to their organization. While the Republicans demand unchecked power, the Democratic party, which divides with them the population of our country, seeks by the election of a President and a majority of the House of Representatives to gain a voice in the councils of nation. Its success will not enable it to pass nor repeal laws without the assent of its opponents in the Senate. The largest share of power and patronage will still be left in the hands of the Republican party. Under our government no violent changes of policy can be made except by repeated elections. Surely at this time of business distress and gloom every thoughtful citizen should desire such distribution of power as shall make each political organization watchful to note and vigorous to correct the wrongs of its opponents. In this way only can we hope to correct not only gross wrongs, but the more subtle, and, on the whole, the more hurtful usages which waste the revenue of the government and oppress the industry of the country. On our part we offer our candidates for the Presidency and the Vice Presidency and the majority of the House of Representatives to represent the Democratic party in its efforts for reform. On the other hand, let the Republican Senate and the great array of officials represent their organization.—Then coming elections can be decided in view of their respective exhibitions of ability, virtue and patriotism. It was never designed by the founders of our government that one party should control all its branches for so long a period that it would lose sense of all accountability. It was because the Republicans have thus held power that they have outraged the sentiments of their own partisans. It is because of recent Democratic victories that they begin to feel the necessity of commending themselves to the favor of the public. Will thoughtful, conservative citizens check this wholesome change before they have been confirmed in more virtuous habits by tempting them again with unchecked power?

I believe the people of America will not make this fatal mistake, and, therefore, I am confident that we shall carry our State and elect our Presidential ticket. I am, truly yours, &c.

HORATIO SEYMOUR.

The State Board of Education met at the Executive Chamber of the State House Tuesday. An application was made for the formation of a new school district in Morris county by the people of Stanley, to be made out of the Chatham and Long Hill districts. A considerable time was spent upon this application, and the matter was laid over until the November meeting of the Board. Joseph S. Smith was appointed County Superintendent of Warren County vice Ephriam Deitrich, who had been appointed by the Board, but was rejected by the Board of Chosen Freeholders of that county.

CAUTION!

The undersigned would caution the public against using or sinking driven wells under Nelson W. Green's patent, unless the same are put down by him, as all parties using the same otherwise put down, or sinking such wells will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, he having the exclusive right to sink driven wells in Plainfield. The following is a decision recently rendered by Judge Benedict, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Wm. D. Andrews, owner of a patent granted to Col. Nelson W. Green, for a driven well, sued Theo. A. Carman some time ago to restrain him from the use of the patent in the manufacture of a similar well. The testimony filled over one thousand pages and counsel were over two weeks in summing before Judge Benedict in Brooklyn. The patent is worth a million dollars. The well is an air-tight iron tube, driven into the ground until it reaches water-bearing stratum. An air pump is screwed on the top of the tube, and the other end is of steel, made sharp and perforated. Many thousands of the wells are in use. Carman is accused of using a similar well. Counsel for the defence contended that the patent was merely a new plan of more easily reaching the water bearing strata, and could not be held patentable. Judge Benedict held that the idea of forcing water from the earth into a well pit by artificial means was new, but was not patentable, but that the method by which the idea is made available was patentable. He decided that the infringement had been clearly proved.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

FASHIONS OF THE PERIOD.

AUTUMN STYLES—LATEST CONCEITS AND NOVELTIES.

Three large bows of lace, with a flower in the centre of each, are called Pompadour bows, and are worn in front of square-necked dresses.

The new collars are called bibs.—They are made of fine white organdy, cut quite straight around the neck, with the front laid in fine pleats, and edged with lace.

Worth makes wool dresses for the early fall with blouse-waists that are held in place by a wide belt of velvet, feather, or ribbon. Some of these dresses have yokes in the back but not in front.

Pompadour fichus are to be worn with square-necked dresses. These are made of lace-ruches, with a ribbon in the centre to hold them in place. A rose-bud in a nest of lace is placed on the left side of the neck.

The new head-dress worn in day-time and in the house by Parisiennes is called the Pompadour fanchon. It is a fanchon square of lace with ends that are passed under the chin and fastened on the left side by a bow of ribbon.

For edging garments trimmed with braid, fringe is the appropriate choice. The new fringes are so wide and elaborate as to almost form the garment itself, and, indeed, many cardinal capes, fichus, and tabliers are made of chenille fringes.

Ladies who are fond of contrasts will prefer to relieve dark costumes by wearing light gloves; such as the new greenish cream-color and many unbleached and yellow shades; the latter are deeper and darker in gloves as well as in dress goods.

The polonaise is very decidedly in favor again. It is made very long and clinging in front and on the sides, and the drapery behind is neither gathered nor puffed, but is merely drawn back by one large bow or by the scarf arrangement just noticed.

Ladies who study economy, and at the same time want to be well-gloved, use the unpressed kid glove for all occasions, even when full dress is required. It is true, they soil easily, but they are also easily cleaned, and are more durable than the dressed kid.

The lower skirts of dresses will retain their present clinging shapes. Overskirts will nearly cover the lower skirt, and will be made with scarf-fronts, or else very long and full and draped on the skirt beneath in various fanciful and irregular fashions.

Long-wristed gloves that give slender shapeliness to the hand are preferred. Those fastened by three or four buttons are now chosen for general wear, while for full-dress occasions they are so long that from four to twelve buttons are required to fasten them.

The peplum corsage, it is said, will take the place of plain cuirass basques when the next season's styles appear.—These are basques made very long on the sides, where they may be either square or pointed, while the front is quite short, and the back has a square position.

Doublebreasted, diagonal, Pompadour, and revers fronts are all announced as being in preparation for winter costumes. The Marie Antoinette collar, passing around the neck and extending half-way down the front, is a revived fashion for trimming the fronts of corsages.

For semi-dress there is a a great variety of the popular wood shades, ranging from pale oak and ash tints to dark walnut brown. There are also many drab and other nondescript hues, that fastidious people prefer to the cream, and lavender shades that are now so universally worn.

Wide braids in one or two rows will be more used than narrower widths.—There are various names for these braids, such as the Breton braids, with flowers in relief; the Valois braid, with flowers in silver; the Figaro braid, which is all wool; and the Coat-of-Mail braid, composed of gray or blue steel.

Gloves fastened by but one button are $1.75 a pair; those with two buttons are $2; with three buttons, they are $2.35 a pair, or $13.50 for half a dozen pairs. The stylish four-button glove is $2.75 a pair; full-dress gloves, fastened by six buttons, are $3.25; the elbow gloves, fastened by ten or twelve buttons, are $5 or $6.

The braids that have been gradually coming into favor promises to be the accepted trimming for the winter.—Canvas braids embroidered are the popular trimming in Paris at present. The ground is wool, in basket or canvas pattern, wrought with flowers or other figures by machine, just as Hamburg embroidery is done.

Kid gloves imported for the fall retain the plain, simple styles lately worn. The snowy embroidery formerly displayed on the back of gloves is no longer used. Their beauty now consists in their fine fabric, appropriate color, and, more than all, in their perfect fit, with seams neatly over-stitched and following the outlines of the hand.

Undressed kid gloves that fit the hand as though it were moulded in them come in these neutral and nondescript shades, and also in dark walnut and seal brown. These dark shades are not open to the objection of showing soil so easily as the medium colors, and will be much worn by those who could not hitherto afford the luxury of this beautiful glove. White, light gray, brown and ecru is the usual range of color.

The white kid binding on the wrist of the glove is the only ornament commended. Old-fashioned medium and neutral tints of gray and brown are very largely imported. "Ink shades," however, predominate, and will, it is said, be the most stylish choice, as they will match the dark costumes to be worn in the winter. These are nearly black, and consist of ink blue, ink gray, or iron color, myrtle green, seal brown, and plum-color.

The fashionable combination of colors for costumes for the fall will be that now in vogue in Europe, viz., navy blue with cardinal red. The navy blue to be used when cooler weather comes will be of the ink shades and of the queer blue tint known as Sphinx-color, which is a metallic blue that is almost black. The costume will be made up of wool and silk as at present; the wool of the over-dress will be India cashmere, camel's-hair, or the laine carree, or square figured woolen stuffs, already described among the newly imported fall goods. Very little of the red is visible, but there is enough seen to produce a very quaint effect.—Harper's Bazar.

ENIGMATICAL PROVERBS.

Silence is wisdom when speaking folly.
Use soft words and hard arguments.
Be just to all, but not trust all.
Short reckonings make long friends.
Contempt is the sharpest reproof.
Reproof never does a wise man harm.
I sell nothing on trust till to-morrow.
Bear and forbear is good philosophy.
Every heart has its own ache.
Fall not out with a friend for a trifle.
Of two evils choose the least.
Rebuke with soft words.
The great thieves punish the little ones.
High places have their precipices.
Every man hath his weak side.
Cover your path with truth and honor.
One story is good till another's told.
Never quit certainty for hope.
Silence seldom doth harm.
Take me not up before I fall.
I love you well, but touch not my purse.
Time and words can never be recalled.
Use pastime so as not to lose time.
Truth and oil are ever above.
I live, and lords do no more.
Old praise dies unless you feed it.
Nothing sharpens sight like envy.
A fair face may hide a foul heart.
Little and often fills the purse.
It is truth that triumphs.
Sickness is felt, but health not at all.
The easiest way to dignity is humility.

Kilpatrick, the Phila. Times thinks, is a good deal of a fool. It would have been easy for Hayes to say that he did receive such a letter as Kilpatrick wrote and the Indianapolis Sentinel printed. Instead of this somebody in Columbus sends out, through the N. Y. Times, what appears to be an official statement, acknowledging the authenticity of the letter, but declaring that there is nothing in it to be ashamed of. "It says that money is needed to circulate documents, etc., which has long been an open secret in the State and out of it." The "etc." here is very important. It is explained by Kilpatrick; "The leaders of the Independents are poor, needy and in debt;" and again; "A bloody shirt campaign with money and Indiana is safe."

Under the seven years of Grant's administration the cost of the Indian Bureau, under the Indian ring, has reached the enormous sum of $172,000,000. The Indians all told are less than 300,000, so that the money spent would have kept them at first-class hotels and left a large surplus to the Government. But expenditures will be large so long as Indian agents on a salary of $1,500 a year manage to save from $30,000 to $75,000 annually.

At several recent Democratic barbecues in Mississippi the negroes formed a very considerable part of the attendance. In a procession of Tilden and Hendricks clubs of Hinds county, 529 colored men were in the line, and one gray-haired veteran among them remarked, "Well, our house folks are our only friends after all."

Rutherford B. Hayes is said by one of his biographers to have been a model infant scholar. He played with the little girls; he was never tardy; he didn't splinter his desk, nor throw paper balls at unoffending mates, nor blow up with powder the institution of learning, nor pin streamers on the unconscious backs of trusting teachers.

If dishonest men are not to be allowed in office, should Gov. Hayes be elected President, how is it that the men the most active in promoting his election have always fought bitterly for their retention in the past?

Talk about "going by rail" to a western school teacher, and he will very soon tell you his sad and painful experience, and the far-able time he had in that line of riding.

Dubbs says railroad conductors have such a habit of "punching" tickets that if a poor chap don't happen to have a ticket he gets "punched," off at the first station.

Dubbs thinks that to wait for the next centennial requires more time and patience than the present generation have got to spare.

Dubbs says you can talk about nights being cool and ice being cool, but the coolest thing is to ask a man to work for nothing and board himself.

NEW JERSEY
Enamel Paint Company,
RARITAN, NEW JERSEY.
Manufacturers of
Bradley's Enamel Paint.
Mixed Ready for Use, in any shade, Tint or Color desired.

THESE Paints are composed of the purest and best materials known to paint-ers; the principal ingredients being Pure White LEAD, ZINC and LINSEED OIL, which are made to unite in a homogeneous mass by the addition of other materials which add greatly to the durability, elasticity, beauty and strength of the Paint. The whole are chemically combined so that the pigments are held in permanent solution, thus forming a new compound which dries on the surface and adheres firmly to it, thus forming a Smooth Glossy, Firm, Elastic, Beautiful and Durable Paint.

The Oil, which is the real life of the Paint, cannot leave it and be absorbed by the substance on which it is applied, as it does in paints mixed in the ordinary way, & thus leave the pigment dry and chalky, to wash & rub off in few months. This paint is unaffected by changes of temperature, is perfectly impervious to the action of water, is well adapted to all classes of work, & is in every way a better paint for either inside or outside work or boat painting than any other Paint known to the trade, and will last at least three times as long as the best Lead and Oil mixed in the ordinary way.

These Paints are Ready for use,
Are easily applied by any one, require no mixing, stirring or addition of dryers.
Liberal Inducements to Dealers.
And full satisfaction guaranteed to their Customers.
Sold by the Gallon, Keg or Barrel. Orders attended to promptly. For Price List and Sample Color Card, Address,

POETRY.

DEMOCRATIC REFORM IN '76.

Ho! Reformers, see the signal
Waving in the sky;
Reinforcements now appearing,
Victory is nigh.
"Hold the fort, for we are coming,"
Hear the people cry;
Wave the answer back with fervor,
"By your help we'll try."

See corruption boldly stalking
In our Congress Hall;
In our Presidential Mansion,
Twisting great and small.
"Hold the fort, for we are coming,"
Hear the people cry;
"We will vote for Tilden, Hendricks,"
Honest men we'll try.

See the rings, the combinations,
Whisky, railroad, land;
Wicked schemes for peculations,
Rife on every hand.
"Hold the fort," etc.

See the shameful defalcations
In our saving banks;
Robbing poor men, widows, orphans,
By their thieving pranks.
"Hold the fort," etc.

See our commerce, credit, sinking,
Factories all still;
Workmen idle, begging, starving,
Suffering every ill.
"Hold the fort," etc.

See our taxes, swelling, rising,
Money almost gone;
Produce falling, no one buying,
Farmers' faces long.
"Hold the fort," etc.

See the host of office-holders,
Honest be, they can't;
For if honest, faithful, worthy,
They'd be turned out by Grant.
"Hold the fort," etc.

See the office-holders' ticket,
Running in Grant's track;
If elected "No removals,"
No Reform in fact.
"Hold the fort," etc.

Come, then, voters, come with us,
Vote for Uncle Sam;
He has throttled many evils;
Yes, he has, and can.
"Hold the fort," etc.

If you want to see times better,
Prosp'rous times again,
Rally 'round our Reform banner,
Vote for our Reform men.
"Hold the fort," etc.

No seductive woman tempter
Can draw him aside;
His loved wife is our whole country,
She's his only bride.
"Hold the fort," etc.

Hoi ye voters pure and honest,
Rally with us then;
Vote for Tilden, vote for Hendricks,
Vote for honest men.
"Hold the fort," etc.

THE MISHAPS OF A NIGHT.

In the thriving village of Hollythorne there were (as is common in such places) a church, post office, a couple of stores, a district school, the said school being taught by a young lady who had a widowed mother, and brothers and sisters to assist in supporting.

For the sake of economy, Miss Eva Stanley "boarded around" among the scholars, and was considered a paragon among the teachers. Her father had been a respectable mechanic, but died after about two years of illness, which utterly impoverished the family. Eva had, however, (she being the eldest,) received a good, plain education before the great calamity came upon them, and noble-hearted and unselfish, began her work of assisting in their support.

The last week previous to the holiday vacation, she had been boarding with a Mrs. Carpenter, who was making gigantic preparations for guests she expected from New York.

"You never met my brothers, Eva," she said, and then began to give the pretty young teacher a description of them—"There's Sam, George and Johnny, the youngest, and such times as they have when they get out here to rusticate, as they call it! But, dear me, I don't get much rest or peace, for they are like a lot of boys let out of school. Such tricks and pranks no one ever saw. The last time they visited me together, John and Sam actually cut a pane of glass from the window, and pelted George out of my best room with snow. You see there is always a regular strife for that particular room, for the bed is a spring one, and they say they don't sleep on any other kind in the city. But they don't get it this time, that is certain, for I intend to give you that room, and so end the controversy. I am so afraid they will break or ruin something, and I am very glad you are here."

"I had just as soon occupy some other room, Mrs. Carpenter, and I do not wish to incommode your brothers. I have no right to do so."

"No you shan't, Eva," peremptorily exclaimed her hostess; "and what is the use of your going home during vacation week? You can stay here just as well as not, and do up your sewing on my machine. Your mother has mouths enough to feed, I guess, and won't miss you."

The subject was dropped and the entire household retired early, for on the morrow the brothers, young, ardent, and full of life, were to be there. But, without sending any word of their intention, they had concluded to take the evening train, which would land them at Hollythorne about bed time. George and John did so, and, when safely seated in the cars began to speculate on the absence of Sam.

"No reason upon earth why he should not have been along," said George.

"No, for he told me this morning he would certainly be on hand," said John.

"I can't make it out, unless he has taken the 5 o'clock train by mistake."

"Not a doubt of it," laughed John, who fancied he saw through the whole programme. "It is most likely he took the train on purpose to get into Hannah's spare bed-room, and make us take up with straw ticks and feathers."

"I did not think of that, but I reckon you are right. We must contrive to get him out somehow."

"Bet your life on that."

The brothers put their heads together, and laughed merrily over some scheme for outwitting Sam, and accordingly when the train reached Hollythorne, about 11 o'clock, they approached the house of their sister in a very stealthy manner.

Climbing the fence in the rear, they softly opened the window and obtained access to the pantry, where they demolished a mince pie and a quantity of doughnuts. Then, with appetites appeased, they removed their boots, and prepared to investigate the "best room," stole along the hall, which was dimly lighted by the moon, ascended the stairs and reached the room.

The faint rays of the moon disclosed a chair piled with clothing, and they could distinctly trace the outlines of a form beneath the bedclothes, and had not the remotest idea but that Sam was enjoying sweet repose in Hannah's best room. A few whispered words were exchanged, and then, as softly and lightly as if shod with down, they drew near.

"All ready," whispered George.

Quick as thought they seized upon the form of the sleeper, bedclothes and all, bore it swiftly down the stairs, and into the snow, and were just about to deposit it into a huge drift, when a shrill scream broke the stillness of the night, and, oh, horror! it was that of a woman! And in their consternation they dropped their burden plump into the middle of the drift.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed George, "it isn't Sam, but some woman, as I'm a sinner, and she's fainted. Run and call Hannah."

With admirable presence of mind he lifted the limp form of Eva Stanley, and carried her into the house. But her cry had already been heard, and the inmates came rushing into the hall just as he appeared.

"George! John! for goodness sake what does this mean, and who have you there?" asked Mrs. Carpenter in a breath.

"Blessed if I know!" began George; "thought it was Sam, so we concluded to give him a douse in the snow for getting into the best bed, and trying to euchre us. Quick! I believe she's fainted."

"Just like you," scolded Hannah, as she assisted in depositing Eva once more on the bed from which she had been so unceremoniously taken; "beginning your tricks upon each other before you fairly get into the house. Clear out now."

Long before she was done with her tirade, her discomfited brothers had betaken themselves down stairs, where they almost went into hysterics over the joke.

"A pretty kettle of fish," said George, letting off peal after peal of laughter.

"I should think it was," replied John, holding his sides. "Oh, my! But what the dickens is to be done about it, and who do you suppose she is, George?"

"Some guest of Hannah's, of course, and young and pretty at that. I don't know how it is with you, but I feel particularly small and extremely cheap—would sell myself at a very low price."

"Cheap!" roared John; "cheap? I would actually give myself away this blessed minute, and throw something in to boot. What are we to do? I can't say; but I believe I shall dig out and get back to the city before morning. I haven't got the courage to face the music, so I'll get up and get."

He began hastily putting on his boots, and would have put his threat into execution but for the appearance of Hannah, who at once asserted her authority.

"You're not going a single step," said she. "But I don't wonder that you feel ashamed of yourselves. What on earth possesses you is more than I can tell."

"That's right, Han, pitch in, scold away; I'll take any amount just now, for I'm meek as a lamb. But who is it we have played so shabby a trick on?" replied George.

"Trick! I should think it was. Why, it is Eva Stanley, just as nice a young teacher as ever lived. She is our school teacher, and this is her week to board here; and I knew you boys would be squabbling over that room as usual, so I put her in there, little thinking that you would come home in a stealthy manner."

"Eva Stanley? Whew! A pretty school teacher!" and repeating his sister's words, he gave vent to a lugubrious groan.

"Has she recovered?" questioned John, vainly endeavoring to restrain his laughter at the wry faces his brother was making.

"Yes. I soon brought her to, but I don't believe the poor girl will ever get over her fright. She said the first thing she knew she was being lifted up and carried out, and she was so much alarmed that she couldn't utter a sound; but as soon as the cold air struck her she realized that she was being abducted or something of the kind, and had just time to utter a scream before she fainted. It is too bad. I shouldn't wonder if she had taken her death, being dragged out of a warm bed this time of night, and dropped into a snow drift in that fashion. No wonder she cried, poor thing."

"Cried, did she?" repeated George with a groan.

"I should think she did. I just took her in my arms, and let her have her cry out, while I explained how she happened to be mistakened for Sam, and became the victim of your mad pranks."

"That was neat in you, Han. I am awful glad you hugged the poor little thing. Wish you had given her a brotherly squeeze for me—'pon my honor I do. I am in sackcloth and ashes from this time, henceforth and forever," replied George with another dismal groan.

"And how on earth do you expect us to stay and take the consequences?" asked John, beginning to look serious. "I am for taking myself off instanter. I had rather face a masked battery than this pretty teacher, after making such fools of ourselves."

"I don't care if you had," replied his sister indignantly. "The only way to do is to brave it out, both of you, and apologize for your rudeness. She is not a bit stupid, but pleasant and merry, and no doubt you will have a jolly laugh over the affair."

"But Sam! how the deuce are we to get along with him? You know well enough, Han, we never should hear the last of it from him; that it will be brought up in all places."

"If you two can keep a secret, I'll find a way to silence Bridget, and it is a subject that Eva will not care to have discussed, and fortunately my husband is away from home. So go to bed and rest contented."

She showed them to the room she intended them to occupy, and soon the house was hushed in slumber.

Meanwhile, their brother Sam had reached the depot a few minutes too late. He found the train he was to have taken already gone, but, upon consulting a time-table, he ascertained that another train started two hours later, and so decided to take it. He figured to himself as he impatiently crowded into an empty seat, and was being whirled along at a rapid rate, how snugly his brothers had ensconced themselves in the best room, which by right belonged to him, he being the oldest, and consummated a plan to get even with them.

Some time after midnight he was deposited at Hollythorne, and reaching his sister's house, he scouted around until he found a way of entrance into the kitchen, where he deposited his luggage and removed his boots. Then he quietly stole up stairs and opened the door of the best room.—"Sure enough," thought he, "my fine chaps are in clover," for they were not-to-be mistaken signs of the room being occupied.—Garments were lying upon chairs and the bed was pressed by slumbering forms.

To think of coping with their united strength in dragging them forth was not practicable; but there stood the pitcher of water, and he knew that a good dousing with icy fluid would bring them out quick enough.

"If I can't have my old quarters," he chuckled, "you shall not, that I am determined on. So here goes."

He lifted the pitcher, approached the bed, raised it high, and suddenly dashed the entire contents upon the sleeper.

Such a torrent of screams as he had never before heard rang through the house, and before Sam could collect his scattered senses, door after door was opened, and Hannah, George and John rushed in, clothed in scanty apparel—Hannah, with a frightened look on her face and a lamp in her trembling hand, that revealed the entire scene.

There, sitting up in bed, with her hair dripping like a mermaid, her night-dress deluged, her face colorless and looking terror, was the young school-mistress; and there was Sam, with the empty pitcher in his hand, the very picture of imbecility, staring about like an idiot at Miss Eva and the havoc he had made.

Hannah, George and John instantly comprehended the situation, and the latter, at the command of their sister, dragged Sam away, while she assisted the drenched and terrified girl to dry clothing, and then took her to her own room and bed, explaining for the second time the mishaps of the night.

"I'll keep you with me now, my poor child," she said, though with difficulty keeping back her laughter. "Those boys are nicely come up with at any rate; and if it was not for your having been so terribly frightened, and the way my best bed has been used, I would not care. They do nothing when they come home but study up some such trick to play upon each other; and," continued she by way of apology, "they are so confined in their offices and stores during most of the year that they let entirely loose when they get out here. But you are safe now."

Hannah kissed her charge, and went down to see about the boys, who, as soon as they were fairly shut in the regions below, began to thoroughly appreciate the joke; and now that Sam was as deep in the mud as they were in the mire, gave no quarter.

"I'll be blamed if I know what it means," said Sam, looking in confusion at his brothers, who were rolling and kicking in convulsions of laughter.

"Wait," replied George, "until Han comes, and if you don't find out," and he gave vent to another peal.

Sam had not smiled, and sat looking the very picture of discomfort and perplexity, but answered:

"For heaven's sake, hold on boys!—I am willing to admit that I am badly sold—gone dog cheap to the highest bidder; but hold up long enough to tell a feller what it means."

"Means? Of course I will," continued George, still holding his sides. "It means that you have stolen like a thief into Miss Eva Stanley's bedchamber—who is a young lady teacher and boarding around; that this is her week here, and thinking that it was your humble servant and Johnny snug in bed, you attempted to drown us out, and made a grand mistake. How do you like it, Sam?"

"I confess I see the point, but I can't see the joke. It is a most outrageous shame."

At this juncture Hannah came in and began berating them soundly, thereby letting out the whole story. It was Sam's turn then to laugh. He struggled manfully to retain his gravity, but the whole thing was so supremely ridiculous that he was compelled to join his brothers.

Miss Eva was not visible at the breakfast table next morning, and Hannah announced that she was sick with a severe cold; whereupon George groaned out and called for a handful of peas to put in Sam's shoes, while that gentleman looked very contrite, and declared that he wanted to shoot himself.—But Hannah had her unruly crew under her thumb for once in her life, and had the satisfaction of also seeing them behave with something of dignity. They appeared to never forget that there was an invalid in the house, and went on tiptoe about; and Sam, who seemed to take the entire responsibility upon his shoulders, sent on slyly to New York for choice fruit and flowers, which he induced his sister to convey to the young lady with the most abject apologies and regrets.

In a couple of days Eva was able to come down stairs. She was looking quite pale, but lovely, and of course divinely when presented by Mrs. Carpenter to her three brothers who behaved quite well, considering the unpleasantness of their situation.

But Sam, who had broken the ice by means of his presents, was the most at ease, and by virtue of his age and experience constituted himself the propitiator, and was constantly on hand to offer Miss Eva a thousand nameless attentions; and before the week was out John declared that "Sam was done for."

"Gone under completely!" echoed George, with one of his dismal groans. "Just think of it, Han—if it had not been for that pitcher of water, Sam would have been whole-hearted this blessed minute. The fellow meets lots of girls much prettier than she every day, with lots of stamps, too.—They say that pity is a twin sister to love, and I believe it."

"Sour grapes!" whispered John, puckering his mouth.

Hannah, singing Eva's praises, commended Sam's choice. She recommended marriage to all of them, as being the only sobering process she was acquainted with. It was a piece of advice, however, they do not appear inclined to follow, notwithstanding Sam's happy lot with the pretty school-mistress of Hollythorne.

She often reminds her brothers-in-law of her unceremonious introduction to a snow drift at the dead of night, and they retaliate with the shower-bath given her by Sam.

FEARFUL ACCIDENT—THE REJECTED DISPATCH.

About this time the circus agent bursts into the country newspaper office and says, breathlessly:

"You the editor?"

"I am, sir."

"Correspondent for some of the metropolitan press?"

"Yes, sir."

"I've got the biggest sensation you ever saw, and I want you to send it off by special to the Chicago Tribune, New York Herald, and all the other big papers."

The editor gets out his pencil and a quire of printing paper, and says, "Pile in."

The circus agent says: "Put down that Blowhard's Gigantic Mammoth Golden Megalothaumatarian Circus—it's a big thing, I tell you, and I am agent; Barnum's is a side-show to it, and Lent would have to burst up and go home on foot only our old man lent him money—have you got that down?"

"I have."

"Well, add that we have been tenting up in the Northwest and been coining money everywhere, while all the little one-horse concerns that get up big posters and obtain money under false pretenses haven't been taking in stamps enough to pay for their licenses—houses papered, all of 'em."

"Go on."

"Well, last week, while we were moving the show from Oshkosh to Howville in seven special trains and 165 cars, the train carrying the Zoological Carnivorium ran off the track and all the dens were smashed and the animals got loose."

"Bless my soul, you don't say so!"

"I tell you it was worse than the Cincinnati Convention. The anaconda swallowed the only real African giraffe in this country, imported specially for us at a cost of $158,000, all but ten or fifteen feet of its neck. The poor animal's efforts to escape from its living tomb were frantic, and the look of dumb, almost human, agony in its large, lustrous black eyes, moved the sternest advance agent to tears."

"Dear me!"

"Then the Royal Bengal Tiger, the Sumatran Lion, and the Big-Horned Rhinoceros got into a three-cornered fight, and the way in which the air was full of bowls, and dust, and blood, big chunks of meat like sirloin steaks a-whizzing round—it makes me shudder to think of it."

"It must have been terrible!"

"Terrible ain't no word for it. Then the Chinesian Gigantic Orang Outang and the Blue-Faced Gorilla came up with clubs formed of saplings 16 feet long, and as big round as your leg, and sailed in like policemen into a primary meeting, and in 2:14½ they had flattened out them tigers, and lions, and rhinoceroses, till there wasn't one of them dared say his soul was his own."

"Wonderful! wonderful!"

"You're just talking. Then the Elephant, Mercutio, turned wild with fear and rage, and trumpeting like a thunder-storm, ran into a fold where a farmer had a flock of 100,000 Merino sheep, and such mutton-juggling I never saw in my life. He'd just yank up a sheep with his trunk, and give him a jerk, and—zip! that sheep would go shooting through the air, and come down flat as a pancake six hundred or seven hundred yards off. It was just old chain-lightning, and it would have made your eyes stick out to see it. Why, once he had seventeen sheep in the air at once."

"How many lives lost?"

"None, thank Heaven. We always have a steam fire-engine filled with chloroform on the train with us, and as soon as we could get it out and get steam up we began playing on them, and, of course, when they were stupefied, it was the easiest thing in the world to catch them and put them back in their cages."

"I understand; but that poor giraffe?"

"O, we gave the anaconda a barrel of emetics, and the giraffe came up kiting, but the action of the anaconda's gastric juice has taken all the color off'n his hindquarters and half-melted off his hoffs."

"How wonderful are the works of nature?"

"You bet. Now sock it to them red-hot and lively, and I'll ante up all the tickets to the show you want."

The editor does so, and goes to bed to dream that he is an anaconda trying to swallow a long-necked circus, marked "special complimentary to the own Tribune," when he is wakened by the telegraph boy, who brings him the following:

"Your special to Chicago Tribune about circus accident refused. Please pay bearer $65 14. OPR. W. U. TEL. CO."
—Goose Creek Avalanche.

WHAT A POOR, SICK TRAMP WAS FORCED TO DO.

It was a poor, dejected looking tramp, who came limping wearily into town yesterday evening on the Fort Madison road, and, with the instinct of his class, made his way directly towards Main street, where the stimulant and company are most numerous. He had a very tired look, and his poorly shod feet seemed to weigh a ton apiece. The sun had burned his face to a deeper brown than even the knotty hands that hung listlessly at his side. He did not even carry the inevitable stick, and the little bundle, without which the tramp's outfit is never complete, although heaven only knows what is in it, was swung from his shoulders by a heavy twine string, like a rude knapsack. No man is alive now that wore clothes when the hat he wore was made. It was a fearful and wonderful hat, and attracted more attention than anything he had on or about him. He limped along Main street from Locust up, diving into private houses on occasional forays for bread, which were generally successful, for his poor, dejected, sorrowful looking face threw a great deal of silent eloquence into his pleading, and the women could not send the low-voiced man away hungry. These forays were varied by occasional dives into places of refreshment, where he vainly pleaded for a small allowance of ardent spirits for a sick man; the general result being that he was courteously refused and gently and firmly kicked out by the urbane barkeeper, who saw too many of him every day to be much moved. The poor fellow limped along till he got a little above Division street, when he had to pass a knot of young men, and one of them, a smart looking chap, in a gamey costume, and carrying a broad pair of shoulders and a bullet head, surmounted with a silver gray plug hat, hung on his right ear, sang out:

"O, shoot the hat!"

The poor tramp only looked more dejected than ever, if possible, and shook his head meekly and sorrowfully and limped on. But the young sport shouted after him.

"Come back, young fellow, and see how you'll trade hats!"

The outcast paused and half turned, and said in mournful tones:

"Don't make game of a onfortnit man, young gents. I'm poor and I'm sick, but I've the feelings of a man, an' I kin feel it when I'm made game of. If you could give me a job of work, now——"

A chorus of laughter greeted the suggestion, and the smartest young man repeated his challenge to trade hats, and finally induced the mendicant to limp back.

"Take off your hat," said the young man of Burlington, "and let's see whose make it is. If it isn't Stetson's I won't trade."

"O, that's Stetson's," chorused the crowd. "He wouldn't wear anything but a first-class hat."

But the tramp replied, trying to limp away from the circle that was closing around him:

"Indeed, young gents, don't be hard on a onfortnit man. I don't believe I could git that hat off my head; I don't indeed. I hain't had it off fur mor'n two months, indeed I hain't. I don't believe I kin git it off at all. Please let me go on."

But the unfeeling young men crowded around him more closely and insisted that the hat should come off, and the smartest young man in the company said he'd pull it off for him.

"Indeed, young gent," replied the tramp, apologetically, "I don't believe you kin git it off. It's been on so long I don't believe you kin git it off; I don't, really."

The young man advanced and made a motion to jerk off the hat, but the tramp limped back and threw up his hands with a clumsy frightened gesture.

"Come, young gents," he whined, "don't play games on a poor fellow as is lookin' for the county hospital. I tell ye, young gents, I'm a sick man, I am. I'm on the tramp when I ought to be in bed. I can't hardly stand, and I hain't got the strength to be fooled with. Be easy on a poor——"

But the sporting young man cut him short with, "Oh, give us a rest and take off that hat." And then he made a pass at the poor sick man's hat, but his hand met the door sick tramp's elbow instead. And then the poor man lifted one of his hands about as high as a derrick, and the next instant the silver grey plug hat was crowded so far down on the young man's shoulders that the points of the dog's-eared collar were sticking up through the crown of it. And then the poor sick man tried his other hand, and part of the crowd started off to help pick the young man out of a show window, where he was standing on his head, while the rest of the congregation was trying its level best to get out of the way of the poor sick tramp, who was flailing about him in a vague, restless sort of way that made the street lamps rattle every time he found anybody. Long before any one could interfere the convention had adjourned sine die, and the poor tramp, limping on his way, the very personification of wretchedness, sighed as he remarked apologetically to the spectators:

"I tell you, gents, I'm a sick man; I'm too sick to feel like foolin'. I'm just so sick that when I go gropin' around for somethin to lean agin I can't tell a man from a hitchin' post: I can't actually, and when I rub agin anybody, nobody ought to feel hard at me. I'm sick, that's what I am."—Burlington Hawkeye.

THE POETRY OF THE THROTTLE-VALVE.

Not long ago an engineer brought his train to a stand at a little Massachusetts village where the passengers have five minutes for lunch. A lady came along the platform and said: "The conductor tells me the train at the junction in P. leaves fifteen minutes before our arrival. It is Saturday night, that is the last train. I have a very sick child in the car, and no money for a hotel, and none for a private conveyance a long, long way into the country. What shall I do?"

"Well," said the engineer, "I wish I could tell you."

"Would it be possible for you to hurry a little?" said the anxious, tearful mother.

"No, madam, I have the time-table, and the rules say I must run by it."

She turned sorrowfully away, leaving the bronzed face of the engineer wet with tears. Presently she returned and said: "Are you a Christian?"

"I trust I am," was the reply.

"Will you pray with me that the Lord may delay the train at the junction?"

"Why, yes, I will pray with you, but I have not much faith."

Just then the conductor cried out, "All aboard." The poor woman hurried back to the deformed and sick child, and away went the train climbing the grade.

"Somehow," said the engineer, "everything worked like a charm. As I prayed, I couldn't help letting my engine out just a little. We hardly stopped at the first station, people got on and off with wonderful alacrity, the conductor's lantern was in the air a half minute, and then away again. Once over the summit it was dreadful easy to give her a little more, and then a little more, as I prayed, till she seemed to shoot through the air like an arrow. Somehow I couldn't hold her, knowing I had the road, and so we dashed up to the junction six minutes ahead of time."

There stood the other train, and the conductor with the lantern on his arm. "Well," said he, "will you tell me what I am waiting here for. Somehow I felt I must await your coming to-night, but I don't know why." "I guess," said the brother conductor, "it is for this poor woman, with her sick and deformed child, dreadful anxious to get home this Saturday night." But the man on the engine and the grateful mother think they can tell why the train waited.—Jim Goodsell's Theological Tracts.

"What'd you mean by humbugging madam asked an ugly barrister of an old lady who he was cross examining. "I don't know as I can exactly say, sir; but if a lady was to say that you're a handsome man, that would be what I'd call humbugging."

It is difficult to explain the workings of the youthful mind. A boy who will listen indifferently to the sublimest truths of theology will be aroused to the acutest interest by the progress of a caterpillar over the collar of the baldheaded man in the pew in front of him.

"I don't see how you can have been working all day like a beaver," exclaimed the wife of a lawyer, her husband having declared he had been thus working. "Well, my dear," he replied, "I've been drawing a conveyance all day, anyhow."

A thirsty toper, in a bar room, flung down his sixpence and then filled his glass to the brim with whisky. "Hold on!" exclaimed the bartender, in apparent astonishment, "there is a chromo goes with that drink!" and tearing off a portion of the end of a cigar box, he politely handed it across the counter.

"Can I travel through your county with impunity, unless I'm provided with fire-arms?" inquired a commercial traveler of a hardy frontiersman at the Central Hotel! Why not? You oughter have a Winchester and two six-shooters, though, and be sorter quick at pulling them," was the calm reply of the patriarch from the West.

Central Pennsylvania has potato bugs, and as the worthy husbandman in drab wanders about his garden he remarks feelingly to his wife: "Verily, Martha, the spirit almost moves me to eject with vehemence sundry of the quaint phrases common with the lost ones of the world's people."

Two little girls were lately prattling together, and one of them said: "We keep four servants, have got six horses and a lot of carriages; now, what have you got?" With quite as much pride the other answered: "We have got a skunk under our barn."

An Indiana youngster was reciting her Sunday School lesson, which was about Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. "What did the Queen bring to Solomon?" asked the teacher. "Costly gifts," was the answer. "What did Solomon show her?" "His wisdom and his breeches," was the startling reply. The answer on the lesson paper said: "His wisdom and his riches."

Democratic Nominations.

For President,
SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
OF NEW YORK.

For Vice President,
THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
OF INDIANA.

FOR CONGRESS—FOURTH DISTRICT.
ALVAN A. CLARK.
OF SOMERSET COUNTY.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

The Democratic Electors of the several Counties, Townships and Wards, composing the Third Congressional District of New Jersey, are requested to meet at their respective polling places for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Democratic Third District Convention to be held at [illegible], on TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER [illegible], at [illegible] o'clock noon, to nominate a candidate to represent the Third District in the ensuing Congress, and to transact such other business as may be brought before the Convention.

Each Township and Ward will be entitled to a representation in said Convention of one delegate to every one hundred Democratic votes cast at the last gubernatorial election, and one for each fraction of the same, over fifty.

[illegible],
Chairman of last Convention.

VERMONT AND MAINE.

The Dutch have taken Holland and glorious is the victory!

Bring out the big gun!

Vermont and Maine have gone Republican, as they have been going from a remote period of time, but, notwithstanding the desperate efforts of a multitude of speakers and the expenditure of a large corruption fund, they lag considerably behind the majorities obtained in 1872, the last Presidential year.

What a victory! Summon the torchlights!

Judging from the exuberant joy manifested by some of the Republican politicians, the fear must have been entertained that even Vermont and Maine were about joining the Democratic column.

Democrats never expected anything of that kind. They don't need them.

A splendid victory!

Let all the dogs bark in chorus!

REFORM.

The Republican editors and orators speak contemptuously of the Democratic watchword REFORM.

It is natural for them to do so.

The reckless partisans now in power under Grant, and seeking, through the election of Hayes, to retain evil supremacy, have no affinity with Reform—not a mite.

It is a terrible thing for them to contemplate, and to escape its just and scathing punishment, they hope to blind the people as to the real issues of the campaign by raising a cloud of infamous falsehoods against the Democratic candidates, and endeavoring to re-animate sectional animosity by waving bloody shirts and traducing peaceable citizens of a restored Union.

The trick is too transparent—Messrs. Chandler, Morton, Robeson, Boutwell, Cameron and Company! You cannot humbug the American people as you have heretofore done! They are not fools, though many thousands of them have been reduced almost to beggary by your mal-administration of public affairs!

To the people, not to the vampires around the Treasury, Reform is a dearly prized purpose.

Reform cannot be lied down, it cannot be smiled down, it cannot be frowned down.

IT IS A LIVING ISSUE.

It must be met, because a suffering country demands it.

Reform means that plundering by officials, and official connivance with ring thieves of every name and grade shall cease.

That the millions of dollars annually wasted under the guise of public expenditures shall be saved.

That rigid economy shall take the place of wanton prodigality in every department of government.

That the immense army of office-holders, political lazzaroni, 80,000 strong, now eating up the earnings of honest industry, shall be disbanded, and only a number employed sufficient to do the public work faithfully and with credit to the country and themselves.

That gold of standard fineness shall be the only legal tender, as the Constitution directs.

That laws shall be enacted for the general good and not for the special benefit of any particular interest, and that all enacted law shall be impartially enforced.

That official robbers shall be punished like other criminals.

That Honesty shall govern every public transaction, and Morality and Ability be the essential requirements for appointment to office—from Cabinet Minister to Village Postmaster.

That is the Reform the people demand, and its securement depends upon the election of TILDEN AND HENDRICKS.

REPUBLICAN AUTHORITY.

The Elizabeth Monitor, a Republican paper, says that one of the prominent speakers at the recent Republican Convention owes the Government several thousand dollars as a defaulting Paymaster, and adds—He's a nice rooster to talk about honesty and reform."

We quote Republican authority.

Can it be possible, that the great party of "moral ideas" has so far degenerated as to harken to and applaud such a man as the Monitor pictures!

Whither are we drifting?

NEW LEBANON, N. Y., Sept. 9.—Moses Y. Tilden, a brother of the Governor, died this morning at half-past three o'clock.

A SOUTHERN OUTRAGE.

A number of colored men in Charleston, South Carolina, formed, as they had the free and legal right to do, a Tilden and Hendricks Club.

An armed mob of colored Republicans vowed that the colored Democrats should not meet, and taking riotous possession of the street, threatened death to every citizen that interfered.—One peaceable man was killed by them and several wounded.

It was a dastardly outrage.

Yet the Republican papers are mute regarding it.

It was a flagrant violation of the rights of citizenship.

But Cameron's standing army did not come forward to uphold law and justice.

Democrats were being shot down.

Had the assault been committed by Democrats, with one-quarter the violence, how the bloody shirt would have fluttered from Maine to Nebraska, and how all the Boutwells and Killpatricks would have raved upon the stump!

Truth is mighty and will prevail.

THE WAY THE MONEY GOES.

A Government steamer, fitted up in luxurious style, is now making a pleasure excursion along the coast with a large party on board, and under the pretext of an official inspection of the various Navy Yards.

She carries the notorious Chief of Construction and Repairs, an adept at employing men about Election times in contravention of law, and has among her guests the Prince Imperial, Fred Grant, a commissioned officer in the United States Army, drawing large pay from the Treasury, and who ought to be earning it by hunting for Sitting Bull on the Western Plains.

The said pleasure cruise will squander thousands of dollars of the people's hard earned money, and that's the way it goes.

Reform! REFORM!! REFORM!!! is the only antidote.

WHAT NEXT.

The last charge against Governor Tilden was made by a blatherskite at a Hayes banner raising in New York the other night, namely—"That he and Fernando Wood manned and equipped a rebel privateer and sent her out of the harbor of New York in the fall of 1860."

Mind you, before even South Carolina had passed an Ordinance of Secession, the fellow says the privateer was dispatched.

What did she capture?

What became of her?

Doubtless the story will form subject matter for another Times supplement, and it is just as reliable as the many others issued from that scurrilous press. The fact that the author was whiskey crazed, will not affect its character a particle in the estimation of unprincipled politicians striving for an extended lease of corrupt power.

Never in the history of political depravity were candidates so wickedly maligned as are those two upright citizens and able statesmen, Tilden and Hendricks, now before the people of the United States for President and Vice President. The lying abuse heaped upon them by venal journals and spoils clutching leaders proves them to be the very best of men, and the weapons of defamation, instead of injuring, will rally to their support legions of independent votes.

SCHURZ.

Rumors, thick and ominous, are flying through the country in reference to ex-Senator Schurz and his connection with the campaign. It is well nigh impossible to determine, as yet, what the truth really is, but that there is a screw loose somewhere is evident.

It is said that Schurz has taken occasion in his speeches to assail Pres't. Grant and some of the Republican Senators, and to have written to his friends that Ohio and Indiana will go Democratic in November, which, of course, is "Treason, sir, treason," and he has, in consequence, been treated as the French treat their Press when they don't please them—he has been warned. We are of the opinion, however, that the matter is somewhat worse than reported. The coming week will probably bring us thorough developments.

NEW JERSEY ELECTORAL CONVENTION.

The Democratic State Convention for the election of Presidential Electors met on Wednesday, 12th inst., at Trenton. The proceedings were unusually enthusiastic. Ex-Gov. Parker presided assisted by one Vice-President from each County. Our eloquent and energetic fellow-citizen, Wm. B. Maxson, being selected from this County, a compliment to Plainfield which we hasten to acknowledge. Senator Bayard, of Delaware, who was present, was introduced and received with cheers. He delivered an eloquent and telling speech.

The Committee on Resolutions reported two resolutions, the first approving the St. Louis platform and the second ratifying the nomination of Tilden and Hendricks. The following Electoral ticket was nominated and elected:

Electors at Large—Joel Parker, of Monmouth, and William W. Shippen, of Hudson.

Electors for Congressional Districts: First District—Benjamin F. Carter; Second—Franklin Gauntt; Third—Benjamin Williamson; Fourth—John C. Durham; Fifth—Ashbel Green; Sixth—William H. Camp; Seventh—John R. McPherson.

The Convention adjourned with nine cheers for Tilden and Hendricks.

Creedmoor—America Ahead.

The five competitors in the International Rifle Contest at Creedmoor, viz: the Scotch, Irish, American, Austrian and Canadian teams, commenced the struggle Wednesday last. The results were excellent and the excitement great. The Scotch team carried off the honors of the day after a close struggle. The score stood as follows: Scotch, 1,566; Irish, [illegible]; American, 1,577; Australian, [illegible]; Canadian, [illegible].

The [illegible] from Creedmoor puts America ahead by the following grand total:—

American, 3,126; Irish, 3,101; Australian, [illegible]; Scotch, 3,061; Canadian, 2,923.

NEW YORK DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The Democratic Convention of the State of New York assembled Wednesday last at Saratoga to fill the vacancy occasioned by the declination of Horatio Seymour of the nomination for Governor. The Hon. Lucius Robinson, now Comptroller of the State, was after one ballot nominated by acclamation. The nomination of Mr. Robinson appears to give great satisfaction. Mr. John Kelly, of New York city, withdrew his name as Elector-at-Large and moved the substitution of that of Horatio Seymour, which was carried. The ticket is now complete and we look for a rousing majority in that State in November for Tilden and Hendricks, Robinson and Dorsheimer.

AN EARTHQUAKE IN PLAINFIELD.

At the Grant-Hayes ratification meeting held in this city last week there appeared a Moral Luminary from the banks of the Hudson, a wonderful stump speaker, whose words, according to the party organ, "flowed like a rapid river, and whose home thrusts has irresistable effect."

What a mighty engine he must have been! How fortunate that Plainfield survived such a political inundation and earthquake, and that a single Democrat or Liberal Republican lives to tell the tale!

He was heralded as a speaker, but, judging from the official report of what he uttered, the role of a mountebank suited him well.

Among other things, and which seemed to be the grand event of the occasion, he told the story of a wicked Mississippi steamboat captain who cheatingly professed religion, and got his boat from off a mud bank by assembling a prayer meeting on her stern.

Shades of Barton and Powers, how that convulsed the audience! It was so witty, so original, so argumentative, so eloquent, and the "illustration so put." "It came near splitting the roof of the venerable Church edifice.

The effect was astounding. Learned Lawyers, grave faced Judges and scholarly Professors tore their garments in the delirium of joy, bold Doctors, forgetting themselves, swallowed their own medicine and then laughed it up. Editors danced along the dusty aisles like witches on a spree, office-seekers and office-holders, with frenzied glee, threw their hats at the waving torches, and amid the wild excitement, one ardent youth towering above the surging mass, with stentorian lungs wagered a thousand dollars to five that Zach Chandler—I mean (correcting himself) I mean that Zach Hayes has this night been elected President of Vermont—hip-hip-hurrah.

It was a wonderful scene. "The Major's name will be long remembered," aye, and so will his deeds.

However unpleasant, we must expose the sham.

The story that Moral Luminary rehearsed was Belknaped—pilfered, the first time he ever did such a thing, we hope. It originally dropped from the lips of a Western Republican of eminence and was expressly designed by him to fit the Republican party.

Its history is this:

At a gathering of Republicans opposed to Grantism, and who favored the nomination of a very different stripe of man (a Republican) from Mr. Hayes, held in Chicago just previous to the Cincinnati Convention, the Rev. Robert Collyer was among the number, and then and there told the story in the following words:

"A great many years ago, on one of our Southwestern rivers, there was an old skipper who had a steamboat which was sailing in shoaly water and got stuck in the mud. She swung around in the water, and there was no chance to get her afloat, [illegible]. He was a terribly profane old fellow, and everybody knew it through the country. Suddenly an idea struck him. He said to one of his deck-hands: 'You go up to the town and tell them I have got religion, and I want them to come down and hold a prayer-meeting on board.' The deckhand went to the town and spread the news around, and every one being interested in the old skipper's conversion, went to hold the prayer meeting. The old man was standing ready to receive them, and as they came down he said to every man, 'Go aft,' and they all went aft until the great [illegible] was at that end. They all went aft until there was a great weight, and the end which was in the mud got loose, and the boat floated off. As soon as the boat got afloat the skipper said, 'The meeting is over. Jump ashore.' In our Republican party—I mean those leaders—there are men who get religion every time there is going to be an election. They say, 'Gentlemen, go aft, go aft.' And we go aft. We are a good-natured crowd in this country. The best-natured fellows anywhere on this planet are a crowd of Americans, such as I see before me to-night. We are good believers, and we go aft, and the old boat floats again, and then we jump ashore. Now I don't mean to go into that prayer-meeting any more. I don't mean to have anything more to do with that old skipper. I mean to find, if I can, some man who doesn't get religion once in every four years."

That is the story as first told by Mr. Collyer, and he gave it truthful point.

The old hulk of Grantism has by trickery been again floated off the mud bank. Mr. Hayes is on board a figure head, but that "terribly profane old fellow" holds the helm and directs the crew. He is the real Captain, and, no doubt, the Major is a subordinate after his own heart.

Look out for those chaps! They are the beauties who profess to get religion once in every four years. Keep an eye on them!

In view of the noise made by the Republicans over the reported returns from Maine, it will be profitable to read what some of that party's papers say in reference to "that victory" in Vermont, about which just as much noise was made recently.

We copy from the Graphic, a paper very much devoted to Hayes and Wheeler:

"The Springfield Republican well says: 'We observe that the more intelligent and sober Republican organs are beginning to deprecate the cheap and airy boasts of the foolish sort over this Vermont victory, and are even expressing the opinion that a careful study of the figures shows quite as much ground for anxiety as for rejoicing. The facts justify the opinion.'"

And the Graphic adds:

"As the figures of to-day show that the majority is only 23,550, it cannot be said that Vermont is very much of a victory, for a like increase of Democratic votes in the doubtful States would give them to Tilden. The interest now centres upon Maine. The canvass there is mixed owing to local differences in the Republican party, but by Tuesday morning we will have some indications as to the progress of the campaign [illegible]."

If we mistake not, the returns from Maine when complete will just as little exalt our now shouting Republican friends.

THE ISSUE.

It is a conceded fact that the controlling issue upon which the Democratic party purpose to conduct the present political campaign, is that of Reform. It is the first great imperative necessity of the country in this stage of its history; the foundation, which must first be laid broad and deep, before we can reasonably hope for any improvement in the present condition of our national affairs. It is idle to expect that our shattered finances can be reduced to system and order, or that peace and good will can be restored in the States of the South until this issue be decided. The people well understand this matter, and the prevailing desire among them, every where expressed, is that a thorough change in the administration of the affairs of the government, both in the mode and in the men who are to execute it, must be accomplished. None know the fact better than the leaders of the Republican party, but while they profess it to be their intention to gratify public demand in this direction, it is apparent that there is no honesty in their professions. The effort every where made by them to distract public attention and draw it away from this matter, is convincing evidence of this fact. The base attempts made by their public speakers, prominent among whom is their candidate for the Vice Presidency, to revive the passions which were prevalent during the war, to foment and perpetuate sectional hate, sufficiently indicate the course through which they hope to elect their candidates and continue, if they do not intensify, the present lamentable state of the country. Of the "bloody shirt" we have certainly heard enough, yet it too is flaunted into the faces of the people who long ago learned first to doubt and eventually to totally disbelieve the stories of Southern outrages so extensively published immediately before every election in the North.

Upon these reports and their efforts to bring down the characters of the Democratic candidates to the level of their Belknaps, their Robesons, their Camerons, their Chandlers, their Babcocks and others, they rely to hoodwink the people and effect a continuance of their hold on power. Yet they are not backward in announcing that they too favor Reform. They point to their candidate for the Presidency and ask us to accept him, against whom, they say, no word of reproach has ever been uttered, as an assurance of what they intend, always forgetting that they, his advisers, his supporters and his managers, are the ones against whom public clamor is most loud and public indignation most intense. Gov. Hayes, a reformer! when Chandler directs the campaign for him! When Shepherd, Babcock, and the rest of the unclean crew which have made Grant's administration odious, support him! When he himself utters no remonstrance against sending bayonets into the South to overawe the people and interfere with their exercise of a great constitutional right? No, no! the people are not so blind, and the estimation in which they hold Gov. Hayes and those who surround him, will be proclaimed, in no uncertain tone, in November next. We affirm that the election of Gov. Hayes will change, in no particular, the present condition of affairs, make no difference in the mode of administering the civil service, and be simply a perpetuation of the Grant Administration, intensified by the arrogance which most frequently waits on success. That this is understood by the Republican leaders is evident from the following extract from Governor Morton's speech, of two weeks ago, delivered in Indiana. He says:

"The administration of any President will be in the main what the party which elected him makes it. If he breaks away from his party the chances are that he will be broken down. In a government of parties like ours the President must have his choice of officers. The men to whom he owes his election, who have defended him from assaults, to whom he must look for support in the future, will ordinarily control his action and he will do nothing offensive to them."

Here is a free, frank admission from one of the leading Republican Senators occupying a prominent position in the councils of that party; no step is taken in this campaign of which he has not full knowledge, and what he asserts in relation to the policy of the party is of authority.

We ask our readers to carefully peruse the above extract, and then compare it with the assurances we read in the Republican press and hear from Republican speakers, in regard to Gov. Hayes' intentions in relation to the Civil Service, the Southern question, &c. His intentions will never be realized, his promises of reform will prove a delusion and a snare, for "the men to whom he owes his election, who have defended him from assaults, to whom he must look for support in the future, will ordinarily control his actions, and he will do nothing offensive to them."

We submit if it is not evident, even to a demonstration, that we must look to some other source than to the candidates of the Republican party for a reform in our national affairs.

The Democratic party have presented SAMUEL J. TILDEN as its candidate for the Presidency; a reformer true and tried, who has no entangling alliances, who has proved the sincerity of his professions by his deeds, and who possesses the requisite ability and honesty to faithfully discharge to the satisfaction of all the people the duties belonging to that high office. We believe that all men who love our country, who desire to perpetuate our institutions and to preserve inviolate the Constitution bequeathed to us by our Fathers, will rally to his support and triumphantly elect him to the first office in the gift of the American people, and thus secure a reform real, solid, substantial and permanent.
